BLACK HAND IN PEASLEE KILLING

Vengeance Note Left by Mysterious Slayer of Wealthy Henniker, N. H., Manufacturer Bears Crude Drawing

Theory of Rivalry in Romance Is Advanced for Motive, but Is Denied by Friends of Victim—Crime Was Well Planned

HENNIKER, N. H., May 23.—The baffling mystery of the murder of Howard W. Peaslee, prosperous manufacturer and consulting expert for the State Highway Commission last year, who was found shot dead in his easy chair in a small office building on his estate early today, was made more complicated tonight by these additional developments:

The announcement that the vengeance note left by the murderer was signed with a crude pencil drawing of a Black Hand.

The discovery that, while Mr. Peaslee was shot with his own shotgun, the murderer brought his own shells. The two shells found in the gun outside the building, one discharged, the other loaded, were of a brand not used by Mr. Peaslee and not kept on the premises.

The persistent gossip that Mr. Peaslee, whose own domestic infelicities were well known, had incurred the enmity of more than one man through friendships he had made in the community.

These discoveries late in the day added to the whirl of gossip and speculation about the murder. The crime, in its bold execution, stands as one of the most sensational in the State, while the very audacity of the murderer seems to have covered all tracks for the present.

The vengeance note reads:

THIS IS A WARNING TO OTHERS WHO DO CROOKED THINGS

MURDERED IN DEN.

Mr. Peaslee, who was proprietor of the Henniker Toy and Novelty Company, and who had been Selectman and local road agent for the County Commissioners, as well as expert on road-building for the State Highway Commission—a man of substance, known through all this part of the State—was assassinated as he sat figuring estimates on some toy-making in a small outbuilding on his premises which he had fitted up for a combination den, sleeping quarters and office.

The murdered shot him about 9 o'clock last night. The gun was one which Mr. Peaslee kept standing in the little entry of the outbuilding.

The murderer, according to latest investigation, crept up to the building, opened the outer door softly, then deliberately shot Mr. Peaslee point-blank in the face.

One pane in one of the rear windows of the building is broken. It is thought the murderer fired through this or through the doorway.

THREW GUN AWAY.

Then the murderer—one shot being enough—threw the gun away about fifteen feet from the building and departed, so far in safety.

The discovery that the murderer furnished the shells is significant. It indicates, apparently, that the assassin was familiar with the size of the bore of Mr. Peaslee's shotgun and knew that a gun was there.

The vengeance note, which forms a grim item in the tragedy, was found slipped under the lower sash of the broken window. It was written in pencil on cheap note paper. The Black Hand drawing at the buttom is a rough affair, but there is no doubt what is meant. The note is

Italian Anarchist Seeks to Kill the German Emperor

GENEVA, May 23.—A few hours prior to his departure from Basle enroute to Germany from his Corfu estate, Kaiser Wilhelm had a narrow escape from the pistol of an Italian anarchist named Cevo.

The Swiss police got wind of the anarchist's plan and succeeded in arresting the man as he was entering the railway station at Basle. In his pockets they found a loaded revolver, a copy of a popular anarchist journal inside of which was folded a rough plan of the station and ten dollars in cash.

The man did not answer the description given of Cevo, and declined to give his name. When questioned he said: "Yes I am an anarchist and I am proud of it."

When asked why he had come to Basle, he said: "I desired to see the Kaiser on business."

He declined to give any further information.

Liner Royal Edward Runs into Iceberg

Wireless Gives Report of Accident to Ship Sailing from Montreal.

MONTREAL, May 23.—The liner Royal Edward struck an iceberg while outward bound, according to wireless reports received here this afternoon. The Royal Edward is owned by the Canadian Northern Steamship Company. She is 521 feet long and was built in Glasgow in 1907. She is regarded as one of the finest ships in the Canadian-European trade.

A later wireless message received by the steamship agents stated that the Royal Edward had not struck an iceberg head on, as was at first feared, but that she had simply grazed an immense berg.

Pitched Ball Nearly Kills Boston Player

First Baseman Cross of New England Trust Team Badly Hurt.

George Cross, first baseman of the New England Trust Company's team, was unconscious for half an hour and suffered internal injuries as a result of being struck over the heart by a pitched ball in a game against the Breesy Hill nine at Hingham, yesterday afternoon.

Cross was at bat in the second inning, with two players on bases and the score 5 to 3 in favor of the home team. It was blowing a gale as Pitcher Burgin delivered the ball and it struck Cross with great force as he was in the act of dodging it. The game was called and the injured player treated by Doctors Charles Whelan of Hingham and C. F. Lynch of Quincy. At first little hope was held out for his recovery and he was removed to his home in Brighton in an automobile.

Giordano Picks Miss Farrar for Opera

PARIS, May 23.—Geraldine Farrar was today entrusted by Umberto Giordano with the title role in his opera Madame Sans Gene, which has just been completed and will be performed at the Metropolitan Opera House next season. Miss Farrar is going to Italy to spend the Summer and study the role with Giordano. Campanini will conduct, and the composer is going to New York to supervice the production.

POLICE WILL BE AT CHURCH WHEN STRIKERS TALK

GUARD SHOP TOMORROW

Police Chief James J. Pollard has ordered several patrolmen to attend the service at the First Methodist Church in Wakefield this evening, when representatives of the I. W. W. and A. F. of L. strikers at the rattan factor of Heywood Brothers & Wakefield Company will occupy the pulpit upon invitation of Rev. Francis D. Taylor, D. D., pastor of the church.

Chief Pollard has also ordered thirty-five local and Metropolitan Park Police to be at the factory gate at the opening hour tomorrow.

The factory guard was expected, but the news that police will be at the church this evening added to the excitement that was first caused when Dr. Taylor's invitation to the strike-leaders became known.

ETTOR TO SPEAK.

The representatives of the I. W. W. and the A. F. of L. have been invited to speak as common representatives of the strikers. J. Harry Thwaites, secretary of the rattan workers local of the American Federation of Labor, will speak for them. The I. W. W. speakers will be Joseph J. Ettor and J. H. Downer of Lawrence. Ettor will speak in Italian. Dr. Taylor will speak on "Lessons from the Strike."

The strikers are preparing to attend the service in a body.

Refused permission by the Wakefield Park Commission to address the public at open-air meetings on Wakefield Common, either this afternoon or tomorrow evening, the strikers were pleasantly surprised to receive the unexpected invitation from Rev. Dr. Taylor yesterday.

FOR TOWN'S GOOD.

"This will not be an arbitration meeting but a meeting for the good of Wakefield," said Dr. Taylor. "There are a great number of our townspeople out of work and many of them are beginning to see the wolf at the door. The entire town is beginning to feel the effects of the trouble.

"I am not taking any sides in the controversy and should be glad to have the company representatives there as well as the strikers, but I don't want the meeting to become a debate. It will be more like our regular Sunday evening service. I have personally asked some of the strikers to speak and have been around amongst them to secure their participation.

In spite of the long conferences between the strikers, representatives of the company and the State Board of Arbitration, general feeling in Wakefield today is that the trouble is as far from being settled as ever.

To Build Thirty Miles of Sidewalks

Thirty miles of granolithic sidewalks, through an appropriation of $100,000 and a $100,000 assessment on property owners, Mayor Curley asserted, will be asked for by him at the Council meeting on Monday of next week. He also will urge that the money be raised by issuing ten-year bonds for that purpose.

WAYLAND INN AND PINEHURST CLUB RAIDED

County Officers Seize Liquor Over the Heads of the Local Police.

MOTORISTS ARE CHAGRINED

Two exclusive motor inns in Middlesex County were raided late last night at the direction of District Attorney William J. Corcoran of Middlesex County, over the heads of the local police.

Hundreds of dollars worth of liquors were seized at the Wayland Inn in the picturesque town of Wayland and an hour later officers swooped down in an automobile on the Pinehurst Club in North Reading, where another big supply of intoxicants was confiscated.

These raids were the first to occur in Middlesex County since the Vesper Club seizure at Lowell, five years ago. Last night's seizures caused the biggest kind of a flutter. The ycame like a thunder clap out of a clear sky. Scores of motorists enjoying week-end trips were interrupted in their revelries and were astounded and provoked to find that orders for drinks ceased unceremoniously at both resorts.

Search warrants were procured secretly in local courts yesterday afternoon and were served by deputy sheriffs. Proprietors will be in court tomorrow. District Attorney Corcoran got so many complaints about both places that he took summary action.

Wayland Inn had long been complained of as objectionable to a no-license community. Patrons are alleged to have obtained intoxicants of all sorts without difficulty.

GET SEARCH WARRANT.

Deputy Sheriffs Bert Adams of Marlboro, W. A. Kingsley of Holliston and Albert A. Fillebrown of Ayer got a search warant from Clerk Ladd of the Framingham court. They reached Wayland Inn in the centre of the town of Wayland at 10 o'clock last night in an automobile. The apartments were thronged with fashionably dressed men and women.

Proprietor Alexis Menge was surprised, but promptly escorted the searchers from cellar to roof. An auto truck caried away the supply to Marlboro. The week-end supply reached the depot in the morning from Boston and was caried to the inn in wheelbarows. The deputy sheriffs carted off intoxicants of all brands, from ale to choice wines in bottles and cases.

Three county deputy sheriffs raided the Pinehurst Club, Park street, North Reading, at midnight and seized several hundred dollars worth of liquors. While scores of men and women were tangoing to the music of a banjo and piano, the officers entered the club, put the liquors in a wagon and drove away. It was not until their glasses were empty and they had ordered fresh drinks that the guests knew that the place had been raided.

For several months the police of Reading and North Reading have been receiving complaints regarding the Pinehurst Club. Saturday night is the big night and last night there were over a hundred men and women present when the officers entered.

WALKED IN QUIETLY.

The club is situated in a pine grove Shortly before midnight Deputy Sheriffs Harry Walker of Medford and Joseph Buck of Woburn and Martin Cowiney.

Manager Strann conducted the officers to the place where the liquors weke kept.

The officers seized ten dozen bottles of beer in a barrel, five dozen bottles of beer loose, ten quarts of wine, three dimijohns of wine, one gallon of rum, one gallon of gin, one gallon of brandy, three-quarters of whiskey, some Scotch whiskey, fourteen quarts of mixed liquors and fourteen quarts of ale.

Charles S. Mellen came to New York today and went to his home in New Haven.

Charles W. Morse is said to be slated for examination before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

HUERTA LAYS MINES TO BLOW UP CITY OF MEXICO; U. S. PEACE PLAN OUTLINED

TO STAY IN MEXICO UNTIL ALL WAR ENDS

Realizing That Neither Huerta Nor Carranza Is Friendly to American Prestige, Washington Sounds a Sharp Warning

WASHINGTON, May 23.—"The United States will bring about the pacification of Mexico, peaceably if possible, forcibly if necessary.

"The United States knows that neither the Huerta nor the Carranza faction in Mexico is friendly to American prestige in the republic, and that both sides are playing off this element against the other to gain support from the Mexican people. Regardless of this, the United States will insist on peace in Mexico. The troops at Vera Cruz will not be withdrawn until this is accomplished.

"Such other steps as may be necessary to this end will be taken."

This is the message that will be given by Commissioners Lamar and Lehmann at Niagara Falls to the A B C mediators and to the Huerta delegates and through the mediators to Carranza.

The conference at Niagara was ordered from Washington directly by the President and Secretary Bryan after two days of conference with Carranza representatives.

The position of the United States as told to the mediators and the Huerta delegates, is as follows:

HOSTILITY TO U. S.

This government well understands that there exists on the part of the Carranzistas, who are not represented at the meeting, as well as on the part of the Huertaistas, who are represented, a political hostility to the United States and that both sides are violently opposed to American intervention or intrusion in any form.

Further, this government appreciates that all the factions in Mexico are playing on this one string of hostility to the United State in order that they may remain in good standing with the masses.

Therefore the mediators and Huerta delegates are informed that the United States army sent to Vera Cruz to stay there until the Pacification of Mexico is accomplished, either through the pending mediation proceedings or by means of the army itself with or without the consent of the various factions.

The conferees are informed also that the United States could not withdraw its troops from Vera Cruz without losing the prestige it had gained by sending them there. The prestige it would lose would be both at home and with the three great governments of South America, who have undertaken to put into effect a new doctrine, based on the old doctrine of settling affairs in America by Americans.

It is clearly understood here that the object of this frank statement of the status quo is that it should operate as a threat to Carranza, not by the United States, but by the mediators themselves, who are essentially friends to all the factions in Mexico.

In other words, Carranza is to be

HUERTA, THE DICTATOR

This hitherto unpublished photograph of the provisional president of Mexico was snapped by a resident of Boston during a recent review of troops outside Mexico City.

PREPARES FOR FINAL ONSLAUGHT OF REBELS

Federal Chieftain Ready to Wreck the Capital and Destroy Foes as They Approach Citadel—Mines Are Wired

The following dispatch is significent in that it confirms several previous reports of Huerta's purpose to blow up Mexico City, especially as it comes via London, to which place the Dictator has permitted the transmission of news denied to United States agencies.

MEXICO CITY, via London, May 23.—President Huerta is impressing employes of the electric company to lay wires to the mines planted in all streets leading to the citadel.

It is apparent that the dictator plans to make his last stand there and to blow up his enemies as they approach to storm the citadel.

Tacubaya, Lapiedad and Tlapan streets have all been mined.

The firing station is inside the citadel and thus can be protected until that stronghold falls. The high ground near the Santa Fe powder factory and San Lazaro has also been mined.

This spot would be a good location for the mounting of cannon to be used against the citadel.

The British concentration camp is being put in shape to resist a siege by either Villa or Zapata.

All children are kept within the zone and the men have been notified to remain within bugle hearing.

Vice-Consul John R. Silliman is ill in Mexico City, according to advices received here today, but will be able to travel Monday and will start for the coast that day.

HUERTA NIPS PLOT OF HIGH OFFICIALS AND GENERALS TO KILL HIM

By CHARLES MICHELSON.

Special cable dispatch to the American.

VERA CRUZ, May 23.—Huerta has nipped in the bud a plot involving trusted officials and high generals of the army to seize and kill him, according to advices received today and cording to advices received today from a reliable source in the capital.

As a result of the discovery of this plot, General Manuel Gasque, inspector general of police, has been supplanted by General Alberto Quirez, the youngest general in the army and former director of the penitentiary.

General Quirez says: "We have the names of twelve of the plotters

PLOT TO KILL HUERTA NIPPED IN MEXICO CITY; DICTATOR IS DEFIANT AS CRISIS NEARS

but are permitting them to remain at liberty in the hope that some act of theirs may give us stronger evidence. When the proof is all in my hands they will be arrested wholesale."

The arrangements for the defence of the Citadel and National Palace have been completed and Huerta is now fortifying the Municipal Palace with rapid fire guns with which to sweep the plaza and the avenue of the Sixteenth of September. The building has been packed with food supplies. Volunteers and gendarmes are drilling before daybreak every day in fifty different places about the city. Huerta is evidently determined to fight until the last moment.

FEDERALS DRAWING NEAR.

The Federal outposts are now within two hundred yards of the American lines at Vergara, three miles from Vera Cruz. The whole Federal plan of operations apparently has shifted. Whereas heretofore the most threatened point has been the Tejar waterworks south of the city, interest now centers upon the Vergara water works to the north.

It was near this point that General Robles told his soldiers he would make an attack within four days. Much activity was noticed this afternoon in the Federal encampment on the beach north of our outposts.

The general and his staff were riding about apparently making an inspection. Word filtered through from the Federals yesterday that General Navarette, who commands this division, was shipping his force and it was thought today that the artillery general might be inspecting his new position. Navarette has made the statement that Huerta orders were to attack as soon as the armistice was over.

Deepwater inside the reef at that point would bring the battleships within range of the prospective operations.

VILLA'S ARMY OFF TO ATTACK ZACATECAS AND CLEAN UP STATE

PAREDON, May 23.—The main body of General Francisco Villa's army left here today for Torreon, from where it will move on to Zacateca for campaigns in that district. Seventeen trains transported the 17,000 cavalry, infantry and artillery. General Villa and his staff followed in a special train. A small garrison was left in Saltillo

After the capture of Zacatecas and the cleaning up the State, General Villa will proceed to Aguas Calientes.

BELIEVE U. S. SOLDIER WAS ROBBED AND SLAIN IN VERA CRUZ

VERA CRUZ, May 22.—There is considerable mystery concerning the drowning of Private Florian Sadlowske, a brother of Stanislowe Sadlowske of No. 39 Webster street, New Haven, Ct. The man disappeared on the night of May 21. He is known to have had a month's pay in his pockets before he disappeared, but when the body was recovered the pockets of his clothing were empty.

The theory is being advanced that he was murdered and robbed and afterwards thrown into the water.

Sadlowske was buried with honors this evening. A board of officers has been apponted to investigate the affair.

U. S. GIVES WARNING TO GEN. CARRANZA

told by the mediators that he cannot be recognized unconditionally by the United States. It is the understanding here from what the State Department officials admit in their more or less adroit manner, that it is Carranza's idea to be recognized first, and talk mediation through delegates at Niagara Falls afterwards.

MEDIATION MAY FAIL.

It was the realisation of this situation that brought about today's climax. The mediators, of course, will wait for an answer from Carranza. Nothing, however, seems more certain now than that whatever he does he will do with the full knowledge that he must make some arrangements before he can challenge the right of the United States to maintain its troops in Mexico.

Should Carranza return ultimatum for ultimatum and elect to try conclusions with General Funston, it being his fundamental conviction that the United States should not keep its men on Mexican soil, mediation will "crumble"—and crumble much more rapidly than did the Huerta government.

Mediation, admittedly, is dependent on the co-operation of Carranza. Therefore, the result of the step taken tonight at Niagara Falls will determine whether mediation continues or whether it comes to a speedy end, and the pacification of Mexico by force of arms follows.

The general counsel of the Constitutionalists, Judge Douglas, said plainly this morning that mediation could not be successful without Carranza. All of Carranza's representatives hold the idea that he is on the verge of being in absolute control in Mexico, and he and he alone is the person with whom President Wilson should deal.

Judge Douglas held a long conference today with Secretary Bryan and Envoy Lind, whose knowledge of affairs in Mexico is largely relied on.

After these conferences Secretary Bryan held a long discussion with President Wilson during which they were in direct communication with Niagara Falls. Soon thereafter it was announced that there would be a joint conference of all parties to the mediation proceedings in Niagara Falls tonight.

CARRANZA ORDERS AGENTS TO OBSTRUCT MEDIATION PLANS

EL PASO, Tex., May 23.—General Carranza has instructed his special agent, Jose Vasconcelos, now in New York; Luis Cabrera, returning from a special mission to France, and Iglesia T. Calderon, released from San Huan de Uloa prison by the United States forces at Vera Cruz, and reported en route from Havana to New York, to proceed to Niagara Falls, Ont., and represent the Constitutionalists.

The commissioners are instructed not to make public their instructions pending permission of the United States to be accredited representatives of the Rebels.

Carranza does not expect that they will affect negotiations more than to prolong them for several weeks, in which hime he anticipates the capture of the City of Mexico.

It can be stated that the Rebel representatives are instructed to hinder the commission and prevent the reaching of an ydefinite agreement.

"FAVORABLE OUTLOOK HAS BEEN EMPHASIZED," MEDIATORS STATE

CLIFTON HOTEL, Niagara Falls, Ont., May 23.—"The favorable outlook has been emphasized by this afternoon's conference," was the message of Ambassador Da Gama, Minister Naon and Minister Suarez at the close of an hour's full conference with both the American and Mexican representatives in the mediation chamber here.

The meeting began at 6 o'clock and adjourned at 7. No word was vouchsafed as to what features of the situation had been debated, nor what conclusions, if any, had been reached. But the mediators appeared more confident of success than ever.

CONFERENCES "THAT END NOWHERE" DESCRIBED BY ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., May 23.—Flubdub and flap doodle! What is there for these grave gentlemen to do? They might as well be flying kites. The days are made up of conferences that end nowhere and talks in which nothing is said.

The day's report should run something like this:

There was a conference between the big three and Judge Lehmann and Judge Lamar for the Americans. At the close the Americans, while looking solemn and serious, waved aside all questions. Looking at their watches they tore across the bridge for the American side. They acted as though some great affair were at bay. Guess and surmise flew thick and fast until someone remembered that it was within ten minutets of the Prospect Hotel lunch time. The Prospect Hotel lunches have this in common with time and tide, they wait for no man. The energetic departure of Judge Lamar and Judge Lehmann was explained.

IN A STATE OF STAMPEDE.

Senor Suarez incautiously rounded the off corner of the Clifton Hotel. He was wrapped in thought and the smoke of a diplomatic cigarette. Suddenly, even as a pan of milk from a top shelf, a moving picture man opened his batteries upon him. Instantly he was all activity. Clapping his hat over his eyes he fled like a frightened fawn. No use, the inexorable film fiend had nailed him for a reel.

Later, Senor Suarez decided that, rather than be handed down to posterity in a state of stampede, he would quietly pose for the film fiend. To keep him in countenance, Senors Da Gama and Naon graciously consented to pose with him. Mr. Bryan's Mr. Rose attempted to rough his way into the picture, but was restrained.

"Put none but South Americans on guard," cried the film fiend, and Mr. Rose, after a feeble resistance, was dragged aside.

Senors De Gama, Suarez and Naon, permitted the entire phalanx of camera men to snap them. They posed in every fashion except that of standing on their heads. More pictures were taken of the devoted triumvirate in a given time, than were ever snapped of General Miles or Lillian Russell. Senors Da Gama, Suarez and Naon looked at the negatives. Then murmuring, "posterity will speak of us," they walked away in dreary speculation.

EXCITEMENT RAN HIGH.

Percival Dodge, of the administration's Dodge quartette, made up of Cleveland Dodge, Phelps Dodge, Hartley Dodge and the aforesaid Percival, came up at a breathless canter. Mr. Bryan had just wired confirming the news that Carranza was sending a representative who would listen but not talk. Excitement ran high.

How should he be received.

What would Senors Rabasa, Rodriguez and Elguero, the Huerta delegation, say?

After a heated discussion, carried on in the hissing manner of the Latin American when he whispers, it was formally announced that the Carranza representative would be "received as a newspaper man." Why a newspaper man was not made clear. He might as well be received as a cow man, or a mining man, or a fugitive from justice.

The Huerta three, approached on the point, tossed their expressive hands palms upward and declared that they had no objections to the Carranza representative. Let him appear.

Viva Huerta.

HUERTA A VOLCANO.

He could sustain himself against all of the Villas and Carranzas that ever came out of Chihuahua.

Huerta was a volcano.

A volcano needs no assistance.

Delivering themselves thus, the Huerta three withdrew to a bay window and unbuckled in valiant debate, accompanied by even more violent gesticulations. What they said may not be told. They spoke in Spanish. Also no one approached within fifty feet of them, fifty feet being recognized as a diplomatic distance.

Senor Algara, from Mexico by way of Washington, hove in view. He waved a sheaf of telegrams above his head. The three Huerta representatives made a rush for him. The onlookers held their breath.

Had Huerta quit? Had Zapata taken the capital? No. Huerta was still on the job, Zapata still eating his frijoles in the innocuous suburbs full eighteen miles from the Palace of the Montezumas.

The onlookers breathed again. The Big Three wiped the sweat beads from their South American brows. They might resume their mediations. Had Huerta fallen overboard, they must have packed their grips for Washington, D. C. As it stood, however, Othello's occupation was not gone. Huerta still waved. Mediation might proceed.

The captain of the "Maid of the Mist" entered, making signals. He had a rolling gait like unto a ground swell. His purpose was too politely propose that that ladies come aboard his gallant little bark for a cruise.

MR. BRYAN WIRES.

The ladies accepted with many a giggle and gurgle. They presently departed under convoy of the Jolly Sea Dog, to be soaked in the spray of the Falls until their frizzes looked like shoe strings.

Mr. Bryan wired to ask Washington: "Is Mr. Rose making himself agreeable?" At this severe hunch from headquarters Mr. Rose fell upon Master Romulto and Master Georges, sons and heirs, respectively, of Senor Suarez and Senor Da Gama, and captured them vi et armis. He held one on each State departmental knee, the faces of the children meanwhile expressing the keenest pain. The little ones cast piteous glances here and there and each glance a cry for help. There was no help. Their mothers were away on the "Maid of the Mist." Mr. Rose beamed: Mr. Bryan could find no fault with him now. He prayed silently for a camera man, but the prayer was unanswered.

The sound of a tack hammer broke upon the startled ear. Some deckhand of the Associated Press was tacking up a bulletin. Forty newspaper men descended upon it, even as forty kites might have descended upon a carcass. They read. A look of grief swept over their countenances like a great cloud. The bulletin ran: "The Niagara Falls (American) Y. M. C. A. will hold a special service for journalists tonight. All are bidden." The newspaper men shuddered and drew back. The Y. M. C. A. was barking at a knot.

TORONTO IS JEALOUS.

Down the corridors of the Clifton a pale-faced story came stalking. Senor Naon had been overcharged by a Kanuck haberdasher in the matter of neckties. The utmost indignation prevailed. This must cease or the outfit would shift the ghost dance to Toronto.

Local peacemakers poured oil on the troubled waters. They appointed a board of mediation between Senor Naon and the necktie bloodsucker. The latter money glutton was rebuked and peace again prevailed. There is a local suspicion that Toronto has sent missionaries to stir up trouble with a view to luring the show Torontoward. Also those emissaries to steal from New York's East Side, would find themselves in Dutch if discovered.

Speaking of rival shops, the American Niagara Falls heretofore complained of by the Canadian Niagara Falls, for holding on to Judge Lamar and Judge Lehmann and thereby beating the Canadians out of American ducats rightfully thereon has laid bare its policy. The American town had been falsely and scandalously accused of harboring smallpox in its midst. The slander was calculated to scare off the acsual tourist. To correct this, Mr. Bryan had sent Judge Lamar and Judge Lehmann, not to mention Mr. Dodge, baptised Percival, of the administration Dodge quartette and Mr. Rose to the American side.

No insult to Canadian cookery was designed. If Judge Lamar, Judge Lehmann, Mr. Dodge and Mr. Rose succeeded in concluding their mediatory labors without catching the smallpox it would go a long way toward giving that infamous charge of smallpox on the American side a black eye. That was the Bryan strategy in a nutshell. Canada need not get her back up. She might lose a few dollars, but she should not lose her temper. Mr. Bryan had only the kindest of feeling for Canada.

WORD FROM CARRANZA.

At 3:30 in the afternoon the wires flashed that the name of the Carranza agent then headed for the ghost dance was "Senor Vascouceloa." The word sent the blood of Senors Rabasa, Rodriguez and Elguero, Huerta's representatives, to fever heat. Again they retired to their private bay window, again they jabbered and gesticulated, while the forty newspaper men with bated breath, stood gazing.

The tension was removed only by the return of the gallant captain on the "Maid of the Mist," with the ladies, the latter wearing the sorrowful appearance of doubly drowned rats. For a voyage in the "Maid of the Mist" is no light matter. Wet and unhappy as they were, however, the mothers of those children had force of character to rescue Master Romulto and Master Georges from the clutch of Mr. Bryan's agreeable Mr. Rose, who was still hanging onto them like some affable ogre.

Notice was sent to the newspaper men that Judge Lamar would make a statement at the Prospect Hotel. There was a wild scamper across the bridge at ten cents a head. Judge Lamar said, "There will be no formal conference again until tomorrow."

MOUSE IN THE MILK PAIL.

The Lamars are naturally born diplomats and are fit to deal with the affairs of nations from their cradles. Once upon a time a German paper published a cartoon headed "A Budding Bismarck." The picture presented a stout woman, a boy and a pail out of which protruded the tail and hind quarters of a cat. The dialogue printed beneath the cartoon as telling the story read:

Boy—Mother, a mouse in the pail of milk was.

Mother—Did you take it there out?

Boy—No, I put the cat there in.

This should shed a ray on the Lamar school of diplomacy.

P. S. From certain signs and signal smokes, such as sending for their families and laying in a stock of negligee shirts, it is evident that the American representatives look forward to spending the Summer at the Falls.

The Mexicans continue to call Judge Lehmann "Lemon" and no amount of correction can beat the correct pronunciation into their nontezuman heads.

Makes Hairs Disappear Almost Like Magic

(Toilet Talks)

The woman whose beauty is marred with superfluous hair or fuzz will gladly welcome the new home treatment for removing objectionable growths from the face, neck or arms, because this method is quick and certain in its action and so simple that anyone can use it in the privacy of her own home with entirely satisfactory results.

A paste is made with some powdered delatone and water, then spread over the hairy surface. In two or three minutes it is removed and with it comes every trace of hair. After the skin is washed and dried it will be clear, spotless and of a velvety softness. This is a safe, harmless method, and unless the growth is very stubborn one application is sufficient; but to avoid disappointment be sure to get the delatone in an original package.

'DON'T SQUEAL,' BECKER WROTE TO THE GUNMEN

Dist. Atty. Whitman Has Notes Passed by Convicted Man to Quartette in Death House.

NEW YORK, May 23.—Messages former Police Lieutenant Charles A. Becker passed to the four gunmen in the Sing Sing death house are in the hands of District Attorney Whitman.

If the trial of the former police official had taken a turn adverse to the prosecution, Mr. Whitman would have put the secretly-written letters in as State's evidence.

The convicted Becker wrote in these notes urging that the four gunmen protect him in any confession they might give before going to the electric chair.

"Don't squeal," is the message Becker is said to have written.

The district attorney got two of the notes from Mrs. Lefty Louis Rosenberg, widow of one of the gunmen, while Becker's trial was on. Mrs. Rosenberg came into possession of the notes on the last visit she made to her husband. He told her, she informed Whitman, that they were not to be used until after the death of the gunmen.

"Lefty Louis" confided to his wife, so she told Whitman, that Becker was frightened over the prospect of the four gunmen turning against him, and that he wrote the letters to bolster up their courage. The gunmen say that a book containing the notes was passed on to the others and later sent back to Becker's cell.

Another note was later on communicated the same way.

Whitman has had the handwriting compared with that of Becker, and experts say it is unquestionably his. The writing in the notes was an apparent attempt at disguise, but the characteristics are the same as Becker's.

To get the messages from Becker's cell to those of the gunmen the utmost ingenuity had to be used, so as to prevent the guards from suspecting a trick. Mrs. Rosenburg told Whitman that the gunmen used a book on religion that had been given them by one of their spiritual advisers.

Whitman left town yesterday for a rest after the stress of the trial and no one in his office would discuss the messages from Becker, but it was admitted that such notes were at hand and that Whitman would have used them had the necessity arisen.

Although bitterly cast down over the verdict that condemns him to the electric chair, Becker yesterday assumed a cheerful attitude, hoping that the efforts of his counsel will yet save him. Martin T. Manton conferred in his office early in the day with Becker's brothers, John Becker and Jackson Becker, assuring them that he would waste no time in preparing an appeal.

Chandler Calls Engagement Ridiculous

Back Bay Modiste Just 'Good Company'

SNAPSHOT of Byron Chandler and Miss Hilma L. Nelson, Back Bay modiste, taken yesterday afternoon at Fenway Park. The "Million Dollar Kid" is hiding his face, but in the lower picture was caught off his guard by the photographer.

Just before Byron Chandler and Miss Hilma L. Nelson went to the Red Sox-White Sox ball game yesterday, where they attracted almost as much attention as the game itself, Chandler said to the Sunday AMERICAN:

"The recent story in a Boston morning newspaper that Miss Nelson and I are engaged and plan to wed as soon as Mrs. Chandler (Grace La Rue) gets a divorce, is ridiculous.

"Mrs. Chandler is seeking only separate maintenance, not divorce.

"I like Miss Nelson; she is a dear friend and good company; but this engagement story is very embarrassing to her.

"All this 'Milion Dollar Kid' talk is disgusting."

There was no doubt that Chandler found Miss Nelson good company at the ball game, for occupants of adjoining boxes say he paid more attention to her than he did to the game. When he assisted Miss Nelson into his big green limousine at the Copley-Plaza at noon he bent over the little gloved hand he was holding.

"By gum! he kissed her hand," said one of the group of spectators.

This was Chandler's first appearance at a conspicuous public place with Miss Nelson since the publication of the "engagement" story which he now denies. Chandler has been in town about a fortnight, staying at the Copley Plaza. He occupies a luxurious room on the second floor.

Miss Hilma A. Nelson lives at No. 60 Westland avenue and is in business as a modiste at No. 298 Boylston street, Back Bay.

She is a blonde, in her twenties, with blue eyes, piquant expression and a suspicion of plumpness. She dresses in the manner to be expected of a Back Bay modiste.

When the reported introduced himself Chandler grinned good naturedly and asked:

"Well, what have you got up your sleeve?"

"What have you got up yours?" he was asked.

"I know what you're after," retorted Chandler; "I can tell you right off the bat there's nothing in it.'

"Nothing in what?" he was asked.

"I've got to get away to the ball game. I can't be bothered," said Chandler, sidestepping.

"That story was the limit. I took the reporter in good faith, but the story was misrepresentation of all I said. Such a thing couldn't be. There is no divorce suit pending. It's only a separation.

'Hired, That's All,' Declares Whipple

Boston Attorney Replies to Mellen Hold-up Insinuations.

William A. Read & Co., New York bankers, having a little trouble with Charles S. Mellen, finally engaged Sherman L. Whipple, Esq.—and Charles S. Mellen promptly made a settlement with William A. Read & Co.

It was all about 6,000 shares of Worcester Railways, which Read & Co. held and Mellen wanted.

On the witness stand at Washington Mr. Mellen intimated that he had been held up. He named Mr. Whipple.

"I did nothing at all," Mr. Whipple said last night, "my work in that matter consisted of nothing but being hired."

McDonald After John Quinn's Place

Councillor Is to Give Sheriff Fight for the Nomination.

Councillor Daniel J. McDonald has begun plans for his campaign to succeed John Quinn as sheriff of Suffolk County. He formally declared himself as a candidate and will enter both the Republican and Democratic primaries this Fall.

The "Jerry" Watson investigation, the Councilman believes, revealed such conditions that a change ought to be made. Sheriff Quinn holds office now under the unexpired term of the late Sheriff Seavey.

Mayor Accepts City Hall Annex

City Hall Annex was formally turned over to the city, and accepted by Mayor Curley, by the contracting firm of Wells Brothers yesterday. The contract for moving the different departments into the new building also has been let to C. Bowen, and this work will be commenced in a few weeks.

Leave It to Minot; It's the Boston Way

Mellen Gave New Version of a Good Old Custom.

"It is fashionable, when you die in Boston," Charles S. Mellen told the Interstate Commerce Commission, "to leave your property to Laurence Minot to handle, because he is so high-minded that he can take better care of it than anybody else."

The Mellen version is "different," that's all.

An older reading is that when a man in South Boston thinks he is going to die he wants the priest; in the Back Bay they send for Laurence Minot.

And there are said to be people in Ward 11 who fear that they never can join the right set in the Heavenly Kingdom unless they can show that Laurence Minot is taking care of their estates on earth.

House Under Guard Leaps Into Flames

Letter to Malden Police Adds to Fire Mystery.

While a Malden patrolman guarded a vacant house at No. 99 Lyme street, Malden, following the receipt of an anonymous letter by Chief George H. Butler of the Malden Fire Department warning him of an alleged attempt to destroy the building, flames leaped out of the structure yesterday. How the fire could have started is a mystery.

The letter received by Chief Butler about the middle of the week was:

"I was walking down the street and stopped near enough to some people to hear a conversation between two men. They were talking about a house on Lyme street, the number is 99. It seems that they were planning to send it up in smoke and collect the insurance. As for the street, it might Line or Lyme street in Malden. It's the fourth street from Bryant.

"Signed in good faith,
"A. FRIEND."

The writing is apparently that of a woman and apparently is not disguised. It bears a Boston postmark.

Unmistakable evidence of benzine, both inside the walls and on the second floor, where the fire started, was found.

REFUSED TO GIVE MONEY

The refusal of a woman to lend money to a friend led to a double tragedy in Revere yesterday, when John V. Eberhardt of Jamaica Plain, said to be a deserter from the United States navy, shot Mrs. Agnes Morris in her home on the Revere boulevard, and then turned his revolver on himself, putting a bullet through his brain. He died instantly.

Mrs. Morris was seriously injured, two of the bullets having entered her back. Another bullet shattered her shoulder. At the Frost Hospital, to which she was taken, it was said last night that she had a slim chance for recovery.

Edward Morris, her husband, is a telegraph operator and was away from home. She is forty-four. Eberhardt, who is thirty, entered the Morris home and demanded money.

He and Mrs. Morris had an altercation. The quarrel culminated when he whipped out a revolver. A moment later he shot himself, a bullet in his temple.

The shots alarmed the neighborhood and the police were summoned. They found the woman unconscious, the man dead on the bathroom floor.

Mrs. Ethel Doane, a niece of Mrs. Morris, was in the house and witnessed the shooting. Eberhardt had broken in through the bathroom window. Mrs. Morris had complained to the police that he was annoying her. He had formerly boarded at the house.

Love Alone Will Guide Me, Says Mrs. Cheever

YOUTH IS CERTAIN THAT MARRIAGE WILL TAKE PLACE ★ ★ SWEETHEARTS WALK ARM IN ARM AT REVERE

Scotti Says Her Brother Approves Match

MRS. EMMELINE CHEEVER AND LOUIS SCOTTI.

> When a woman wills, she will, you may depend on't;
> And when she won't, she won't, and that's the end on't.
> —OLD RHYME.

Love always finds a way. So while relatives of Mrs. Emmeline Cheever, the wealthy Boston widow, who astonished her friends by declaring her love for a young Italian workingman, were telling last night that "it was all off" and there would be no wedding bells, "the two sweethearts" were quietly planning their marriage.

And the date? Perhaps tomorrow, at any rate some day this week. But there IS to be a wedding, and Louis Scotti of East Boston, the handsome widow's fiance, is authority for that.

Mrs. Cheever says, "I love Scotti devotedly and I will do anything to make him happy. My love for Louie alone will guide me."

"It is not true Mrs. Cheever has given up her thought of marrying me," said young Scotti last night. "The statement attributed to Joseph Morrill of Dedham and George Morrill of New York, her brothers, to the effect that there would be no ceremony, is false. We love each other, she and I. And loving each other as we do, we shall marry."

WENT TO HIS HOME.

Young Scotti explained that right after Mrs. Cheever had been settled in a Boston hotel following her departure from her brother Joseph's home in Dedham because of his objections to her love, she had gone to the Scotti home yesterday afternoon with her brother George.

"She came here today with her brother George," said the youth. "She came right here. We spent the afternoon at Revere Beach—she and I together. We love one another, she and I. Only half an hour ago I left her at the door of her hotel.

"George said to me:

"'It's all right, young man. If you love my sister as I believe you do, then take her for your wife and may Heaven bless you. Far be it from me to interfere in such a lovely union.'

"That's just what he said. We love each other, and why shouldn't we wed? She won't listen to her brother Joseph. She left his home because she is tired of hearing him oppose our match.

"She is a lovely woman. She has been good to me. Why should I not love her? She deserves to be loved, she is so good, so worthy of admiration and respect. Our love—it is no common thing. What do I want of her money? Ah, all Joseph thinks of is that I am after Mrs. Cheever's money. It is not so. I love the lady.

WON'T MEET LAWYER.

"George and I have become good friends. But I do not care to see this Joseph, the lawyer. He wrote to me, 'Come and see me and let us talk this matter over.' But I will not have anything to do with him. He wants to give me a job, to set me up in business so that I will give up the beautiful lady. 'No,' I said; I love Mrs. Cheever and I will marry her sometime soon. The date is not yet set, but it will be sometime before very long, sure.

"Meanwhile, we go to the theatre. We take long rides in her motor car. We walk on the sandy beach. We walk arm in arm. We love each other. No, it is not true that the marriage is in danger of being called off."

Young Scotti's father and mother and his sister, Anna, as well as his two brothers and his chum, John J. Koppie, are unanimous in their approval of the impending union.

Miss Scotti said:

"Yes, papa and all of us like Mrs. Cheever very much. She and her brother George were here today and met our family. They both seemed very much pleased because of the happy news that the wedding is assured sometime soon. When they left the house, Mrs. Cheever and Louis were walking arm in arm—right on the main street! That don't look much as if it was called off, as Joseph says, does it?"

John Kopple, Louis' chum, said:

"Joseph accuses me of being the arch conspirator in bringing Mrs. Cheever and Louis together for the first time. They say I am a matchmaker," he laughed. "But I deny it—every bit. I had no thought of marriage in mind when I introduced Mrs. Cheever and my chum, Louis, at the North End Civic House last year."

Mrs. Cheever is almost twice the age of Scotti.

Mrs. Cheever is fair, vivacious, keen. Scotti is dark, slight, of tropical temparament, with dreamy eyes and a rich voice.

Mrs. Cheever inherited wealth. Furthermore her husband, who died three years ago, was wealthy. Scotti's father is moderately well-to-do, but the young man himself has toiled as a machinist for seven years.

Mrs. Cheever's friends are the cultured and cultivated folk of the Back Bay, Dedham and the North Shore. Scotti's friends are his father's friends and the young Italians of his own age whom he met in the Mazzini Educational Club.

LIVES IN LITTLE ROOM.

Mrs. Cheever lived till yesterday with her brother in a splendid home on his estate in Dedham. Scotti lives in a little room on the third floor of an East Boston tenement, with a grocery store beneath.

Mrs. Cheever, as the result of the opposition to the marriage by her brother, Joseph Morrill, and his wife, yesterday left their home in Dedham, where she had lived recently.

Scotti went on a shopping trip and laid in neckties, socks and shirts for the honeymoon abroad which he and Mrs. Cheever are planning.

Mrs. Cheever's chief interests are social work, club life and society. Scotti's chief interest—for the past four months—has been in hunting for a job.

After the marriage, if there is a marriage, Scotti will probably live at Mrs. Cheever's home in West Roxbury, where she lived with her husband, John S. Cheever. It will be a new world to him; a world of hardwood floors and Turkish rugs, and delicate draperies, and polished silver and plate, and fragile China, and exquisite paintings—a world calculated to delight his artistic soul.

Mrs. Cheever makes no secret of her devotion to Scotti. Accepting as true the old saying: "If she will do't, she will; and there's an end on't," there can be no doubt the marriage will take place. For Mrs. Cheever says:

"Louie's voice first attracted me; then as I came to know him, I was charmed and won by his splendid personality.

Masterman Loses Ipswich Election

Defeat of Cabinet Minister a Blow for the Liberals.

LONDON, May 23.—The government received a severe blow tonight in the defeat of Charles Masterman in the Ipswich bye-election. This is the second defeat for Masterman, who is a member of the Cabinet and the chief exponent of the Lloyd George's insurance act. When appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Cornwall, Masterman had to seek re-election at Bethnal Green, but his previous majority was changed to a small minority.

The Ipswich election was to fill the vacancy created by the death of Rev. Sylvester Horne, who held the seat with a Liberal majority of 844. This has now been turned into a Unionist majority of 532.

Masterman's defeat is not only a heavy blow for the government but is a severe personal blow for Masterman and it is possible may now net.

BLACK HAND IN DEATH OF RICH NEW HAMPSHIRE TOY MAKER

now in the custody of Coroner Chancy Adams of Concord, who is holding it for County Solicitor Robert Murchie.

There is one theory that the Black Hand signature indicates a murderer of foreign birth or extraction, also that the whole vengeful idea of the murderer and the manner of execution are along the same line.

But a contrary theory has arisen that this Black Hand signature is just a blind, to introduce a confusing element of conjecture into the investigation. These points were hotly argued here tonight.

WIFE KNEW NO ENEMY.

County Solicitor Murchie arrived here at 8:30 and went immediately to the Peaslee place, prepared to hold an inquest.

Mrs. Peaslee gave a brief interview after supper, saying:

"I know of no enemy my husband had who would do such a thing. I was not familiar with his affairs of late, but I cannot even make a surmise in this case."

Shirley Peaslee, the younger son, arrived from Boston at noon.

The vengeance note, it is thought, was written on paper secured from one of the big bales of waste note paper kept at the "leather board" factory, as no local dealer kept any like it. The factory had bales of all kinds of waste, good quality and common paper, stacked up within easy access of anyone who wished to get some paper whose ownership could not be readily traced.

The shells used by the murderer were loaded with "Double O." They are locally called "deer shells," and none of the Henniker dealers had sold any such for over a year. There were on shells of this weight of load on the Peaslee premises. A theory was advanced tonight that the murderer slipped into the building while Mr. Peaslee was at the postoffice, signing some law papers for Justice W. O. Folsom, between 7 o'clock and 8:30. Taking the shotgun from the closet in which it was kept, the murderer slipped out, lay in hiding, loaded the gun and, when Mr. Peaslee returned for the night at 8:30, shot him.

Morrison Peaslee, returning home at 8:30, noticed his father sitting in his chair by the lamplight, apparently figuring.

ROBBERY SCOUTED.

Last week Mr. Peaslee sold a wood lot for $7,500 but he did not have the money on the premises, so any idea of robbery is scouted.

Coroner Adams, after examining the body, gave out a preliminary finding of "Murder by person unknown." Then the Coroner ordered the body left as it was in the easy chair, pending the arrival of the County Solicitor.

Mrs. Belle Bragg Peaslee, wife of the murdered man, who had a divorce suit pending against him, returned home before noon from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. James A. Parmenter, about a quarter-mile distant.

Mrs. Peaslee asked $2,000 alimony, with her divorce. Her counsel is Judge Oliver W. Branch of the Superior Court. George Vernon Hill of Concord, was counsel for Peaslee and is now busy helping the widow and the elder son, Morrison Peaslee, who lived with his father, adjust the business affairs of the family.

A few days ago there was a conference of counsel regarding the alimony demands of Mrs. Peaslee, but no announcement was given out of an agreement.

WIFE BECAME NURSE.

The trouble between Mr. and Mrs. Peaslee dated back six years ago when Mrs. Peaslee is said to have become so bitterly incensed at her husband that they lived together only to the extent of occupying the same house. They hardly spoke to each other. Two years ago Mrs. Peaslee began to go out nursing, to make herself independent of her husband. She was away from home more and more. Recently she went to her daughter's home to nurse Mrs. Parmenter. It was from there that she came this morning. Mrs. Peaslee filed her divorce suit last February.

Though the strained relations between Mr. and Mrs. Peaslee are well known, friends of the murdered man deny that he was paying attention to any other woman, married or single. So the theory of Mr. Peaslee having been a rival with any other man for the friendship of any woman outside his household is refuted by the dead man's friends.

The one shot fired was plainly heard by people in the neighborhood but, as the Peaslees and other families had been shooting marauding cats on recent evenings, no particular attention was paid to the report.

There is much speculation now whether the murderer cunningly figured on just this circumstance, to avoid raising an alarm. If so, this would indicate some one familiar with the community and its habits.

The assassin then pinned the vengeance note to the open windowsill and left, leaving the shotgun about fifteen feet from the door of the building. From the point where the gun was found the trail clases absolutely.

The prominence of Howard W. Peaslee makes the murder even more sensational. He was fifty years old, a life-long resident of this town and is reputed to have considerable money invested.

He had held the office of Selectman and of local road expert for the County Commissioners. He was experienced in road building and last year was retained by the State as consulting road expert.

Several years ago Mr. Peaslee married Miss Belle Bragg of Weare. Their three children had all left home, Mrs. Parmenter living about a quarter of a mile away. The elder son, Morrison Peaslee, is married and was keeping house in another part of the town. The younger son, Shirley Peaslee went to Boston and worked as a private detective for a while, but later entered the employ of the General Electric Company at Lynn, Mass. Some time ago the Morrison Peaslees returned to the Peaslee home to live.

A midnight inquest was held tonight my County Solicitor Murchie in the parlor of the Hotel Henniker. Eugene Wood testified that he had been associated with Peaslee and was credited with telling people that he had lost his job at the latter's place because there was "too much Peaslee."

Wood was the first witness at the inquest which started at 11:30 tonight. A number o fother witnesses were also heard. A sheriff guarded the entrance to the room in which the inquest was held.

A Wonderful Complexion In a Short Time And Other Secrets of Beauty

Formulas That Have Produced Remarkable Results, Revealed by the Self-Made Beauty of the American Stage, Valeska Suratt.

By Valeska Suratt

WHAT is the sense of spending many, many months in achieving a desperate wish when it can be accomplished in only a few days? That is the question I ask of that great army of women whose million hands, morning and night, month-in and month-out, are playing with ten-fingered orchestras, voiceless harmonies as a lure to Beauty. The time to hope for beauty is past—the time to achieve it is here. If every woman who reads this will make up her mind to use the formula given, she will soon experience the greatest surprise of her career. The skin responds with great alacrity when the proper materials are used. Use this and see how every red spot, every freckle and blemish will vanish and leave in its stead a lily-like purity and tint like that of the most beautiful faces you have ever seen. Try it and see. Mix two tablespoonfuls of glycerine in half pint of water and add one ounce of sintone. Stir until cooled. This will form a satiny cream. Use liberally every day. Any drug store will supply you with the sintone.

"Used Liberally, It Quickly Gives an Exceptional Lily-Pure Complexion."

MISS C. F. G.—Yes, even deep wrinkles can be removed in a short time. To a half pint of hot water add two teaspoonfuls of glycerine and two ounces of aptol, which can be obtained at any drug store. Stir until cold. It will then be a satiny cream. Use this liberally every day. It will produce an astonishing difference in a short time, and wrinkles, crow's feet and deep lines will gradually disappear, making the skin plump, vigorous and youthful.

This formula should be the fortune of thousands of women, if they will but use it.

OLIVIA—For a head wash nothing can surpass the use of eggol. This is a cleanser more effective than any soap or other shampoo. It removes every particle of scurf, dirt and skin scale from hair and scalp, and leaves a most refreshing sensation. It makes the hair fluffy and silky, yet easy "to do up." It is very economical, for you can get enough at a moderate cost to produce a dozen or more luxuriant shampoos. Use a teaspoonful of eggol in half a cup of hot water and use as a shampoo.

MRS. V. W. S.—It is easy to have glorious hair. I give you here a formula which is a sure and quick destroyer of dandruff, a wonderful forcer of hair growth, and which stops hair falling, absolutely. Mix half a pint of water with half a pint of alcohol (or take a full pint of imported bay rum, if preferred), and add one ounce of beta-quinol, which can be obtained at any drug store. It will then be ready for use. It is the most economical hair treatment, and the most effective you can ever obtain.

MISS PLACED—For blackheads, sprinkle some neroxin on a sponge, wet with hot water. This, rubbed on the blackheads, will remove them all, big and little, in a few moments. It is the only positive blackhead remover known. It also leaves the skin with a ruddy glow, vigorous and refreshed. To insure removing every blackhead, the entire face should be rubbed as stated above, then bathed with cold water.

SUSAN W. F.—The only superfluous hair remover I know that will not cause a burn or spot on the skin is simple sulfo solution. This dissolves away every hair evenly and completely without burning it off, as is the case when other depilatories are used. It is wonderful to see how easily and peculiarly it works. It leaves the skin soft and beautiful and never fails. Furthermore, it can be used with safety on the tenderest skin, and anywhere on the body. You can obtain simple sulfo solution at any drug store.

DEPRIVED—Developing the bust is problematical, though the following formula has brought about very decided and satisfactory results. It is worthy of a faithful trial. Mix together two ounces of ruetone, half a cup of sugar and half a pint of cold water, and take two teaspoonfuls after each meal and at bedtime. This is perfectly safe. Avoid the use of instruments—they are useless, and injurious besides.

MISS A. C. F.—A blood cleanser and pimple remover that never fails to produce results in quick time is a mixture of twelve ounces of sugar and one ounce of sarsene in a pint of water. Dissolve thoroughly, and take one or two teaspoonfuls after each meal. Get the sarsene in the original package, by the ounce, at any drug store.

LA MISERABLE—The great discomforts of arm-pit perspiration may be controlled by simply sprinkling hydrolized talc in those parts. This will bring the excretions in the arm-pits to normal, the profuse perspiration will be checked, and your gowns will not become sopping wet and fade, as a result. Hydrolized talc is excellent for perspiring feet, or for any excessive perspiration, and it destroys all odors quickly and completely. No woman's toilet is complete without hydrolized talc.

WATCH AND WARD WAR ON BALL POOLS

Wholesale Arrests Threatened; Policemen and Letter Carriers Said to Be Involved.

Under the direction of agents of the Watch and Ward Society a crusade has been started to put a stop to "baseball pools" in and about Boston.

Wholesale arrests are promised on the charge of violation of the gaming laws. Evidence gathered the past week, it is claimed, incriminate police officers, letter carriers and other persons of prominence engaged in the sale of tickets in the South End, Roxbury, Dorchester and South Boston.

Since the baseball season opened, persons known to the sporting fraternity have been "reaping a bonanza" from the sale of tickets, which contain the names of teams of different leagues. The holder of each is charged 25 cents. If the teams on his ticket win the greatest number of runs for the week he is supposed to win the "capital prize" which varies from $25 up.

The promoters of the pool are said to be so skilful that they juggle the number of runs each team make in such a way that it is impossible for a person playing the game on the level to win the capital prize. It is charged that "phony names" appear on the capital prize list, usually one of the ring-leaders in the sale of the tickets, and are credited with winning the prizes.

According to a detective engaged in ferreting out the promoters of the game the police in some sections of the city give their sanction to the sale of tickets.

PATROLMAN IS STABBED IN LYNN RIOT

Two Citizens Assisting Officer Are Kicked and Beaten in Struggle.

Frank Doyle, plain clothes man of the Lynn police, was stabbed in the groin while breaking up a five-cornered fight at Pleasant and Church streets last night, and, when taking three prisoners to the station on an auto truck with the assistance of two citizens was followed by a riotous mob of two hundred friends of the prisoners, including several women.

Thomas Fee, one of the men helping Doyle, was struck on the head with a club. Charles Quimby, the other, was kicked viciously in the abdomen.

Doyle was doing plain clothes duty at 8:30 in front of the J. B. Blood market on Pleasant street when he saw five men fighting across the street.

Doyle grasped two of the men, who broke away and escaped.

Then Fee and Quimby, clerks in the market, came to Doyle's assistance. The other three men in the fight were arrested.

Two of the prisoners, Tony Russo and Tony Raventiia, were charged with assault with dangerous weapons on each other. Raventiia was also charged with stabbing Doyle. The third prisoner, Tony Lewis, was charged with interfering with an officer.

CURLEY ECONOMY COSTS $3,248.85

Teaming Charges in Week for Public Works and Parks Show Increase.

Mayor Curley and economy cost the city's taxpayers $3,248.85 in teaming charges in the combined park and recreation and the public works departments for the month of April, coupled with the combined payrolls of both departments for the last municipal week, acording to figures which the Mayor himself gave out late yesterday. Here are the figures:

Teaming for month of April in public works department, $30,831.77, as against $28,526.99 last year, a difference of $2,304.78.

Teaming for month in park and recreation department, $1,482 against $1,588.50 last year, a gain of $106.50.

Total payroll in public works department for the week in last year $52,448.66, against $54,101.73 last week, a difference of $1,653.07.

Total payroll in park and recreation department $11,418.60 last week, against $12,021.10 for the same week a year ago, a gain of $602.50.

The gross increased cost, therefore, according to the Mayor's own figures, is $3,248.85 under Curley and economy in these two instances alone.

WIFE USES WRIT TO GET HER GOODS

New Chapter in Barrett Divorce Case Stirs Brookline Society.

Interest in the divorce proceedings of Mrs. Ella J. Barrett of Brookline against her husband, Harry V. Barrett, the wool merchant, was revived recently when Mrs. Barrett made legal demand upon her husband for those articles among their personal property which she held were her own possessions. For instance, she saw no reason why Barrett should retain possession of her own picture when she was a young girl.

In order to secure the articles she filed a writ of replevin in the offices of the clerk of courts at Dedham. Later a cart backed up to the Barrett home under Mrs. Barrett's orders. She gave $3,000 as the value of the articles which she had taken.

Among the articles which Mrs. Barrett lays personal claim to are three upholstered library chairs, a dining room table, a sideboard, six side chairs, a dining-room armchair, a dining-room end chair, a tray with glass bottom, a large round plated tray, a mahognay bed with spring and mattress, a mahogany bureau, a mahogany dressing table, a long mirror, a chair for the dressing table, a water color painting ("Lake and Woods"), two upholstered chairs for bedroom, a round table, draperies, two pictures (one of Mrs. Barrett as a young girl and the other an etching), a pillow, four cut glass vases, a baby grand piano and many books.

Every Time He Comes To Town Boys Start Kicking

Only It's a Goat, Not a Houn' Dawg and It's Mr. Curley's.

The man who said he was Mayor of Boston gave the boys of Ward 18 something to talk about, here the other morning, and b'jinks they're talking about it.

Big $4,940 automobile, just like the Mayor's machine, turned the corner from Linden Park into Capot street. In the tonneau a man who looked just like James M. Curley sat with a man who looked just like Mark Angel.

Young fellows on the corner—common, ordinary young fellows—set up something which sounded like a jeer.

One yelled, "O, you old iron!" which appears not to signify much but which had the strange effect of stopping the $4,940 car instantly.

Man who looked like the Mayor jumped out.

Man who had just yelled took it on the run. Mr. Curley's image pursued him.

Into a barroom they plunged, breathless.

Man who looked like the Mayor grabbed the other man by the shoulders, shaking him roughly. Then, this conversation:

"Are you the fellow who hollered at me?"

"Why?"

"Do you know who I am?"

"Why?"

"I'm the Mayor of Boston."

"What about it?"

"Well, the next time you holler at me I'll give you two weeks in the hospital."

Whereupon the man who looked like the Mayor went away from there, back to the $4,940 auto. And the other man went back to his butcher shop.

All of which, following so swiftly upon the Curley-Fitzgerald scene at the Chamber of Commerce gamboil, goes to show that they've got to stop kicking somebody's goat arouno.

$10,000 VERDICT NOW SET ASIDE

Full Bench Decides Against Girl Who Won Case Against Boston Elevated.

Josephine Romana, fourteen years old, of East Boston, who recently won a $10,000 verdict in a suit against the Boston Elevated, will not receive her money, according to a decision rendered yesterday by the full bench of the Supreme Court. She may, however, have a new trial.

The little girl was badly burned by electricity while playing in a lot near the Eagle street carbarns four years ago, electricity escaping from wires lying on the ground in the lot.

The full bench sustained the exceptions of the defendant. The Court holds Judge Wait erred in allowing the jury to find that the child was on the defendant's lot on its implied invitation. The Court says it finds no evidence to show there was any invitation to the child or other persons to use the path across the lot, but that such as used it were mere licensees.

Auto Plunges Into Roxbury Window

The plate glass window of the Eben Hallett stationary store at No. 117 Dudley street, Roxbury, was demolished yesterday when a two-seated automobile skidded near Washington street and crashed into the window. Two men in the car barely escaped the flying glass. The accident was caused when the driver turned sharply to avoid an approaching trolley car.

WOMEN SAY MILITIA FIRED STRIKE TENTS

"Dipped Brooms in Buckets and Spread Contents Over Shelters."

WASHINGTON, May 23.—That men in uniform, supposedly militiamen, were seen to dip brooms in buckets, spread the contents over the tents sheltering miners, their wives and children in the Colorado strike region and then fire the tents, was charged today by wives of miners in an informal hearing before a number of Senators. Mrs. Pearl Jolly asserted she saw this and added: "I could not find out what was in the buckets but I think it was oil."

Mrs. M. H. Thomas declared she saw men in uniform set fire to the tents, but did not see them put the liquid on the tents. She said her three babies were burned when the tented city was destroyed.

"While I was dragging my dead babies away," she said, "militiamen shot around my feet with their rifles. I don't know what for, unless they wanted me to dance."

Senator Kenyon, who, with Senators Kern and Martine, heard the testimony of the women, declared that something would have to be done.

"During all the horrors of the fire," said Senator Kenyon, "the women told us that these militiamen were shooting dogs and chickens as the dead were removed. I am sorry there was not a stenographer to take down the harrowing details told us by these unfortunate miners' wives. I do not know what we can do, but we must do something."

Aviator Hamel Lost on Channel Flight

Grave Fears Entertained for Airman Who Is Friend of Kings.

LONDON, May 23.—Gustav Hamel, most popular and intrepid of the British aviators, friend of kings and princes, and darling of society, is missing tonight after starting from Calais at 3 o'clock this afternoon for a cross-channel flight. Grave fears are entertained for his safety.

Hamel left Villacoublay for Hendon early this morning in a new monoplane. He intended to compete in the aerial derby at Hendon, but had to descend near Boulogne. About 1:30 p. m. he resumed his flight and was seen near Calais about 3 o'clock. Since then nothing has been heard of him. The weather has been unfavorable for flying.

"SLANDERERS!" CRIES BUTLER'S DESCENDANT

Statue of Civil War Hero Is Secondary to Truth, Says Mrs. Marshall.

Mrs. Andrew Marshall, granddaughter of General Benjamin F. Butler ex-Governor and Civil War hero, has taken up the cudgels in defence of her noted ancestor and declares that if need be she will spend the rest of her days in refuting and disproving the slanders hurled at the famouse Massachusetts General.

Last week, when Cameron Forbes Robert S. Hallowell and Thomas L Livermore, the last a war veteran, spoke at the State House hearing gainst a plan to erect a statue of General Butler on the State House grounds, Mrs. Marshall was present to deny statements that might be derogatory to her grandfather's memory. Yesterday she received many congratulations upon her defence and the Lowell delegation members at the State House are confident that the statue will soon be a reality.

"Whether the General's family does or does not want the statue, is no reason for this lying about the dead. It must stop," she said.

At the State House Mrs. Marshall made a ringing speech in refutation of the charges made by Moorfield Storey in a recently published book.

She told how President Lincoln and Salmon P. Chase, Lincoln's Secretary of the Treasury, had both highly commended the General's gallant work at New Orleans, and read letters in proof of her statements.

Now she has started on an investigation to prove that her grandfather was worthy the highest honors.

"There is a limit to the endurance of the malicious falsehoods that have been circulated since the proposed statue was mentioned," she said.

"If these gentlemen want evidence, why don't they heed what has already been said about General Butler from the best sources. They believe anything about him on the flimsiest of evidence.

"They say that he did only police duty in New Orleans during the Civil War, that he took money during that rebellion which did not belong to him and that he stole spoons. His money getting will bear the closest inspection and would compare favorably with the way that many of his critics obtained their money.

"While performing police duty in New Orleans he was a General. His character during the war has been ably defended by those who knew him and those who were associated with him.

"The truth will some day come out I shall see that it does. This question of settling whether a statue should be erected to his memory is to be decided by others. Into that we do not intend to enter.

"General Butler was a man of the people and loved them in the true sense. His career is known and respected in Lowell. He interested himself in shorter hours and was closely identified with the agitation for a ten-hour day. Thus shortened, the day has now become an eight-hour work day. Throughout his life, particularly when he was Governor of Massachusetts and later, he kept the interests of the great mass of people who worked and struggled to live, close to his heart.

Carnegie No Atheist, Declares Minister

CHICAGO, May 23.—Rev. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa., at today's session of the Presbyterian General Assembly vigorously denied charges made by Rev. T. S. Clyce before the Methodist conference at Kansas City that Andrew Carnegie, the steel magnate, is an atheist.

"The charge is absolutely unfounded and untrue," declared Rev. Mr Merrill. "Mr. Carnegie is not an atheist. He is a man of strong religious instincts, and though he is not a member of any denomination I have the highest regard for him. He is no more an atheist than I am."

Arrest Chinaman for Pistol Play

Gee Joy, proprietor of a laundry at No. 87 Union street, Charlestown, was arrested late last night, charged with carrying a loaded revolver. Joy it is claimed, fired three shots in the air after he had had an argument with George Cuneo of Rutherford avenue, because he (Joy) was unable to find the laundry that coresponded with the check Cuneo presented. The shooting caused excitement and nearly a dozen persons, living in the neighborhood called police headquarters on the telephone to find out the cause of the trouble. The reserves were about to be called out when Bartick called the station house with the information that he had Joy under arrest.

TROOPS OF STATE READY FOR FRONT, WALSH DECLARES

Major Heaney, U. S. A., Tells Officers' Club of Difficulties in Mexico.

Assuring Major John W. Heavey, U. S. A., thesenior instructor inspector of the Massachusetts militia, that the Bay State soldiery is ready now, as always, to offer its services first to the nation's call, Governor Walsh struck a popular chord at the first assembly of the commissioned men at the Officers' Club, Commonwealth avenue, last night. Major Heavey, carefully avoiding reference to the probability of war in Mexico, gave the officers a complete description of the Mexican climate, topography, races, diseases and the problems it offered to the tatician, engineer, all from a purely military viewpoint.

"The State milita of Massachusetts is ready, it always has been, and if necessary will offer its services as it has in times gone by, first foremost, before all others," were the words of the commander-in-chief, to which he added, "We sincerely hope that it will not be necessary."

President of the club, Colonel Frank P. Williams, surgeon-general of the militia, introduced the speakers. William Renwick, formerly a lieutenant in Troop C, described the mechanism and operation of a rapid fire gun which he has presented to the militia and which was on exhibition there.

Significant to the officers was the wealth of information which the nation's principal army instructor had to offer the State officers. He told them in detail the problems offered by the great ravines on the west coast, also the immense areas of arid land in whihc foraging would be impossible and long stretches of waterless country to overcome.

All means of communication, railroads, highways, passes and navigable streams were shown on a large relief war map which the United States Army Bureau has constructed.

The great difference in climates from the torrid coastal temperature to the temperature on the high, inland plateaus were shown.

Rittenbury at No. 365 Charles street, lay at the North Grove street morgue last night unclaimed. Pierce slept in the haymow of the barn. He rolled over in his sleep and fell twenty feet through a hatchway, fracturing his skull. He died last night at the Massachusetts General Hospital.

Many Ducked by Bursting Hose

Melrose Crowd Scattered from Fire on Wyoming Avenue.

The bursting of a steamer line playing upon a fire at No. 30-32 West Wyoming avenue, Melrose, yesterday afternoon drenched nearly 200 people and sent others in all directions. Many young women in Summer gowns were among the victims. Many onlookers were seated in automobiles and were driven out of them while the machines were deluged with water.

Damage estimated at $2,500 was done by the blaze, the roof and upper floors being badly damaged. The house was unoccupied and was owned by the Melrose National Bank.

Crawls Out Window and Saves Lodger

After crawling through his transom window and falling down a flight of stairs Edward Sedovitch, a lodger at No. 4 Swett court, Watertown, summoned the fire department at 11 o'clock last night to find the bed of John Stanley, another lodger, smouldering.

Chief A'Hearn declared that Stanley would probably have been burned or smothered had Sedovitch waited to find the key of his door before sending in an alarm.

Miss Madelaine Le Claire and Faunce Whitcomb, and Dorothy Angell and William Woodbridge of Brookline, were other winners.

MILFORD FIRE DRIVES OUT SCORE

Twelve Buildings Destroyed by Blaze That Does Damage of $50,000.

MILFORD, May 23.—More than a score of persons, including thirteen children and five women, were rendered homeless, two horses perished and twelve buildings valued at $50,000 were destroyed this evening by a fire which started in a hay-filled barn adjacent to the four icehouses of the Louisa Lake Ice Company, owned by James E. Macuen.

A strong west wind carried sparks from the barn to one ice building after another. When the fire department arrived from Milford Centre, a mile and a half away, a vain attempt was made to save five nearby dwelling houses.

The four icehouses contained 6,000 tons of ice and much machinery. A second barn in which were two horses was burned before Macuen, who lives near, could rescue them.

The wife and five children of John Lindgren, the wife and four children of Robert H. Datson, Antonio Luciardani and wife and child, George Stimpson with three children and a wife, and Harry B. Macuen and wife are tonight sitting among the ruins of their dwellings or else being cared for by neighbors. A large saw mill was also destroyed.

ITCHING ECZEMA IS DRIED RIGHT UP WITH SULPHUR

Use Like Cold Cream to Subdue Irritation and Clear the Skin.

Constant or intermittent irritation producing itching and red, angry Eczema patches on the skin is readily relieved with bold-sulphur cream. The moment it is applied the itching stops and the healing begins, says a noted dermatologist.

It effects such prompt relief, even in aggravated Eczema, that it is a never-ending source of amazement to physicians.

For many years bold-sulphur cream has occupied a secure position in the treatment of cutaneous eruptions by reason of its cooling, parasite-destroying properties. It is not only parasiticical, but also anti-pruritic and antiseptic, and nothing has ever been found to take its place in overcoming irritable and inflammatory affections of the skin. While not always establishing a permanent cure, yet in every instance it instantly stops the agonizing itching, subdues the irritation and heals the inflamed raw skin right up, and it is often years later before any Eczema eruption again appears.

Those troubled should get from any pharmacist an ounce of bold-sulphur cream and apply it directly upon the affected skin like you would any ordinary cold cream. It isn't unpleasant, and the prompt relief afforded is very welcome, particularly when the Eczema is accompanied with itching.

Don't Let Your Truss Make Operation Necessary

Operation for rupture would hardly ever be heard of if it weren't for the mischief done by elastic and spring trusses.

Mighty few people ever have to be operated on when first ruptured.

But wearing makeshift trusses year after year is sooner or later almost sure to make work for the surgeon.

You know that from your own experience—you know you're worse now than a year ago—probably getting worse all the time.

If you keep on that way, how long will it be before you'll have to undergo a dangerous and expensive operation?

Aren't you willing to let us prove—by a sixty-day demonstration—how you can save yourself from all that?

Especially when you can make this sixty-day test without having to risk a penny!

60 Days' Trial To Prove How Good It Is.

Here is something—a guaranteed rupture holder—which has saved thousands of people from ever having to be operated on.

It has so thoroughly proved its merits that we are willing to send it on 60-days' trial.

We'll make it especially for your case—make it to your measure—and practically lend it to you just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or from bothering you in any way, then you can send it back and it won't cost you a single penny.

Don't Send Any Money.

Simply write for our free book—that will tell you everything you want to know.

It shows how our guaranteed rupture holder is made on an absolutely new principle. How it instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. And how in addition it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

The book tells how our guaranteed rupture holder—the famous Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss—is so beneficial that physicians in all parts of America now recommend it instead of advising operation. How it has completely cured thousands of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless. How it does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps, and springs. How it is perspiration-proof and water-proof and will hold in the bath. How you can try it sixty days without having to risk a penny, and how little it costs if you keep it.

This Free Book Is Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print.

This book sums up all we have learned about rupture during forty years of experience.

Exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

Explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, even if you manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It shows why sixty-days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a test.

Don't fail to get this book—don't put it off—the minute it takes you to write for it may free you from rupture troubles for the rest of your life.

The Most Wonderful Record Breaking Achievement by Any Motor-Driven Vehicle In the World

Erwin G. Baker arrived in New York City at midnight, May 14, breaking all previous coast-to-coast records.

He left San Diego, California, May 3rd at noon, Eastern time, and reached New York 11 days, 12 hours and 10 minutes afterwards.

Baker rode a 1914 7 H. P. Twin Two-Speed Electrically Equipped

Indian Motocycle

With Cradle Spring Frame

He had no mechanical difficulties whatever—and from the Pacific to the Atlantic his motor never skipped.

Baker's route included a 1,027-mile desert stretch of sand and cactus—the negotiation of stupendous mountain trails—and dashes through roads in their worst possible condition.

At the finish Baker stated:

"I could not have possibly cut the coast-to-coast record practically in half if I had not had under me the superb mechanical equipment of the Indian.

"By reason of the Cradle Spring Frame absorbing all road shocks and vibrations, my endurance was trebled, and I was also enabled to make speed over rough surfaces that no rigid-frame machine could have stood.

"And when I came to Black Canon pass, Arizona, the Two-Speed gave an exhibition that surprised even an old motorcyclist like myself. That Two-Speed took me up a rise of 7,000 feet in 9 miles without a minute's hesitation or trouble. This was the supreme test of the Two-Speed—and how it did come across!

"I especially want to emphasize that the Indian I used was a stock machine which I never rode until 3 hours before I started on my run."

Baker's ride was made under the official auspices of the F. A. M., which checked and verified his time.

The previous transcontinental motorcycle record was 20 days, 9 hours and 1 minute.

2,700 Indian dealers will supply you with the exact counterpart of the machine that Baker rode in his record-breaking trip

UNVEIL STATUE TO EMERSON AT CONCORD

By Great-Granddaughter of Philosopher; Selectman Accepts for the People.

MOORFIELD STOREY SPEAKS

The statue of Ralph Waldo Emerson, by Daniel Chester French, was unveiled yesterday at the Concord Free Public Library by Miss Edith Forbes, the ten-year-old great granddaughter of the philosopher, and was formally presented to the town of Concord. Prominent among the guests were Mrs. William H. Forbes and Dr. Edward Emerson, the two living children of Mr. Emerson, and Frank B. Sanborn, one of his contemporaries and who later wrote the "Memoirs of Emerson."

Major Henry Lee Higginson presided at the exerises and paid tribute to Emerson. He then introduced George A. King, chairman of the statue subscription committee and a member of the board of library trustees for forty-two years. Mr. King thanked all those who had subscribed to the fund, and said that the committee which comprised, besides himself, Moorfield Storey, Charles Francis Adams, 2d, Major Higginson and George L. Keyes, had been at work on the fund for almost eight years. While he was presenting the statue, Miss Forbes, assisted by her grandfather, unveiled it.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.

Chairman Murray Ballou of the Board of Selectmen accepted the gift for the town and expressed the town's appreciation. He also paid tribute to the sculptor. "I believe that this is the most fitting place for the statue," said Mr. Ballou, "because in my personal recollection of Mr. Emerson I do not think of him as a scholar, a great thinker, a noted writer or a philosopher, but as a lover of children. The little ones will gain much inspiration from the work and it is the purpose of the Selectmen to leave it in this building, and I believe that the library trustees will preserve it."

He was followed by Mr. Moorfield Storey, who said: "It is fitting that the statue of Mr. Emerson should find its place here, among the books which he loved and taught us to love, in the town which was his home and with which his name must always be associated. Many are the memories which make Concord famous among towns and of which her children are proud, but of all who have dwelt here he is pre-eminently the one who has made it a shrine to which pilgrims come from every land.

"His resting place is the tomb of a phophet, and it is meet that those who have been helped and inspired by his teachings should find here this wonderful likeness, and learn from the contemplation of these marble features what manner of man he was, of what high regard, how benevolent, how serene. It is most fortunate that the rare genius of the sculptor was aided by personal recollection, and to him we and all who come after us owe a debt of gratitude.

SUBLIME SIMPLICITY.

"No ceremony today would be worthy of Mr. Emerson that was not simple, for he was always simple—'in his simplicity sublime.' No eulogy is needed nor would it be in place. We cannot but feel that he is present, and that any word of praise would be unwelcome. Yet we could well wish that he were indeed here, for 'in these distempered days' we would fain turn again to him, who, in the words of Lowell, during the years which preceded the Civil War 'constantly kept burning the beacon of an ideal life above our lower region of turmoil' and whose confidence in the sure triumph of right—as he phrased it in the 'God-way'—is sorely needed now.

"We, of the older generation cannot but think that the ideals which we were brought up to cherish are no longer regarded. Wherever we turn at home or abroad, in China and Peru as well as in Massachusetts, strange doctrines are preached and wisdom calling from the housetop is little heeded. Material forces and material ambitions seem for the moment to dominate, and the intellectual teachers whom we used to follow have left few successors.

NEED EMERSON SPIRIT.

"It may be that the eyes of our minds are dimmed by years of habitual contact with existing conditions and that we see only the froth on the surface of the stream. It may be that we are witnessing a reolution against unjust and long-established privilege which will end in equalizing more nearly the conditions of men; that the institutions which are crumbling are the bulwarks of that privilege and that they ought to fall.

"Men's minds are confused and it is a time when Mr. Emerson's clear vision, his life wisdom, his high faith, his unfailing serenity, are needed to lift us up and fill us with fresh courage. The spirit which we lack shines in his sculptured face, and we may well rejoice that we have helped men to see him as he was.

"Let us hope that time and fate may spare this moment for years to come, but if this hope is vain, we may rest assured that long after this statue has mouldered into dust his teachings, preserved in his written words, will continue to inspire generous youth and to encourage those who in the contest with wrong are like to faint by the way."

Tragic End to Wife's Search for Husband
Finds Her Lost Spouse Had Married Again

Dramatic Story by New York Woman Whose Quest Ends in Boston.

A two years' search for the husband she loved, which ended in finding him married to another woman, is the burden of the strange story of Mrs. Carrie Hale Rambonnet, a New York woman in Boston today seeking an alimony settlement.

Both were prominent Christian Scientists, and when after finding her husband Mrs. Rambonnet told her story to the church board Rambonnet resigned from the church of which he had been an active member.

He is Henri Alexander Rambonnet, expert accountant with an office at No. 161 Devonshire street and living at No. 1378 Beacon street.

Mrs. Rambonnet says after her husband deserted her she was penniless, that for twelve days she ate no food and that for six months she lived in one room and slept in an easy chair, after selling her furniture to buy food.

Mrs. Rambonnet secured a divorce in New York on the only ground New York recognizes. Rambonnet is heir to an estate in Holland, and his hereditary title is Count Don Allie Escablero Dussendorf. His present wife was Alice Roath, daughter of Charles Roath, a well-to-do Connecticut man. She and Rambonnet lied in Chicago before coming here.

Here is Mrs. Rambonnet's strange story:

CHURCH ROMANCE.

"My maiden name was Carrie Hale Van Zile. I met Mr. Rambonnet at a New York church in 1889. I was organist of the Methodist Church at the time and Mr. Rambonnet was a newly arrived Dutch immigrant.

"I loved him from the first time I set eyes upon him. He could speak hardly a word of English, but he had a good general education. He was without funds or friends. I loaned him money.

"I was in business for myself and at my own expense I put him through a good business school. I married him when he was only making $7 a week, and I got his first job for him.

"We were married on July 3, 1890. I opened two corset parlors in New York city and was soon earning $5,000 a year. I kept two servants. I bought all of his clothes and saw that he lacked nothing necessary to his comfort.

CHILDREN CAME.

"Pretty soon the children came. We had five in all. Two of them are living, Edwin, who is twenty-three and lives in the West, and Egbert, twenty-two. I have not seen the latter for six years.

"I became a partner in a large stock firm manufacturing corsets in Cleveland, Ohio. I was worth more than $50,000. But I lost the money.

"We had both become interested in Christian Science, and Mr. Rambonnet was cured of a grievous foot trouble of nineteen years standing by the science. This was in 1902.

That year, in June, Mr. Rambonnet deserted me without warning or explanation. I dinn't hear from him for five years, and finally gave him up for dead.

He left me with only 25 cents. I stayed in the house in New York until I had to get out, and finally I sold my furniture in order to live. I pawned all my jewels and beautiful dresses, and the family silver.

FELT HUNGER'S PANGS

"I had no food for twelve days because I was too proud to beg, or to tell my terrible trouble to my friends. For six months I lived in one room and slept at night in an arm chair because there was no bed.

"I took a position with a corset firm and travelled all over the United States and Canada in my efforts to locate my lost husband. I made inquiries everywhere I went, but to no purpose. By appealing to the Dutch Consul I traced my husband to Boston.

"On the evening of August 11, 1913, I went out to Brookline to his address. I was shown into an apartment and a lady came in presently and asked me whom I would like to see. 'I am Mrs. Rambonnet,' she said.

"'There must be some mistake,' said I. 'I am Mrs. Rambonnet, and I came here to see my husband.' The other woman gave a little cry of surprise. At that instant my husband came in, and seeing me, he rushed at me and grabbed me by the throat. '—— you; I'll kill you. Why did you come here? Leave this house instantly and if you ever bother me again I'll kill you. GO!' he shouted at me.

"In spite of all, I still loved him. I only wanted him to return to me, and I would forgive everything.

THREATENED AGAIN.

"Then I saw a lawyer. As I didn't want to have him arrested for bigamy, he advised be to secure a divorce from him. First I tried to effect a reconciliation, but failed. He declared in a letter to my attorney that his second wife was the first woman he ever really loved, and that neither 'Man, God or devil' could separate him from her. He also said that if I ever crossed his path again he'd kill me. My lawyer has the letters.

"Meanwhile I was being helped by good Christian Science people in Boston who knew of my trouble. They took me in and paid all of my expenses. I learned from them that Mr. Rambonnet had been a member of the mother church in Boston, but resigned when the story came out.

"I appeared in court in New York on February 11, this year, and was granted a divorce.

"My lawyer, Mr. Leon M. Abbot, of the firm of Bates, Nay & Abbot, is arranging for Mr. Rambonnet to pay me a lump sum in discharge of all legal claims upon him.

"God only knows how I have stood it. Was ever woman treated so basely by an ungrateful husband?"

PRINCIPALS IN DESERTION CASE.

Mrs. Carrie Hale Rambonnet and husband she divorced. She charges him with desertion and says she found him married again after a two-year search for him.

INVESTIGATION OF ALL R. R. SYSTEMS

Mellen Gives Quiet Tip That Others Are as Bad as New Haven.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—In the aftermath of Charles S. Mellen's testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission has come the development that United States Senate plans a full and complete investigation of every railroad system in the country. When Mellen unburdened himself and told of the crooked New Haven deals he opened the eyes of many Congressmen.

"The situation has been entirely cleared," said one of these men today, "as far as the New Haven is concerned. Now for the others."

It is known here that the next railroad to be put under the micripscope of the commission will be the Rock Island; then will follow the Pennsylvania and the Northwestern.

Mellen, in a private interview with a member of the commission, intimated before he left Washington that the financial manipulations of these other roads would be found almost as dubious as those of the New Haven.

When the New Haven report is filed Mr. McReynolds will be thrown into an embarrassing position. He may be called upon by the United States Senate to prosecute certain directors of the New Haven. As he could not break his reported promise to these men it is pointed out here that the only alternative for McReynolds is to resign.

Commissioner McChord, who sat on the bench during the hearings will also take a hand in making a report.

While under the ordinary rules of procedure the Senate would not give any orders to McReynolds until after the report had been presented, it is said that in this case so flagrant has been the activity of the attorney general that a hint may be thrown to McReynolds Monday morning.

Two or three Senators are contemplating paying him a visit to warn him of what is coming.

Bell for Divorce Denied to Wife

PROVIDENCE, May 23.—Chester Arthur Bell, whose wife, Elizabeth Georgia Comber Bell, former telephone girl at the Hotel Touraine in Boston, was denied a divorce at Reno, Nev., yesterday, announced today that he was planning to sue for a divorce. Bell, who formerly lived in Lynn, declared that he had a key from a room in a Boston hotel which he said would be an important bit of his evidence. The couple were married in Boston in 1909. "I found out my mistake two weeks after the wedding," said Bell.

Studebaker SIX $1575

At The Head of Its Field in Sales and Volume and Value

Studebaker SIX sales have shot ahead of all others in every State in the Union.

The man who takes time to study values is buying the Studebaker.

He can't do anything else unless he shuts his eyes to stubborn facts.

A Volume greater than that of any other "Six" in America, has resulted in Value greater than that of any other "Six" in America.

What has actually happened is that the Studebaker SIX has fixed a new figure which represents the most that money can buy in a high class car.

Studebaker sales have forged to the head and front because you can't get as much as this SIX gives you, even by paying more.

The Life of a Car

The life of a "Six"—and, of course, its value—depends upon two things. These two things are, first—

The quality of steel used in its construction; and second—

The number and scientific accuracy of the heat treatments.

In that respect Studebaker SIX construction may possibly be equalled by one or two cars selling for the very highest price.

It is not equalled by any car at anything like its price—or a thousand dollars higher.

Studebaker Special Steels

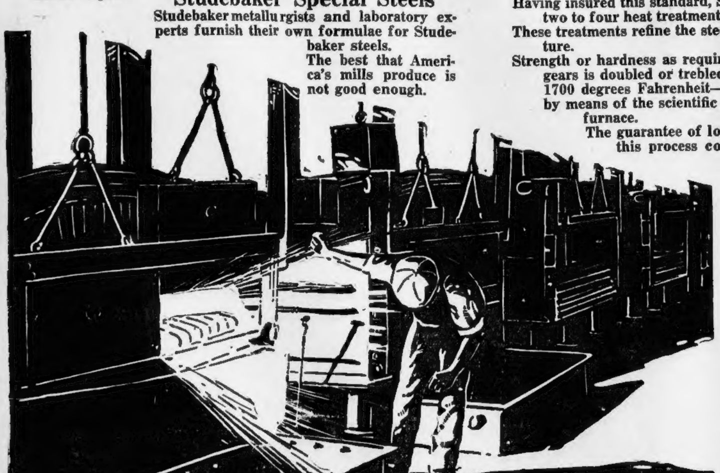
The best that America's mills produce is not good enough.



The steels must be made on special Studebaker specifications.

Then these High Chrome Nickel and High Chrome Vanadium steels must show, under test, an ultimate strength of 150,000 pounds to the square inch.

This is the highest standard known in motor car manufacture—30 per cent higher than the highest average, even in cars costing considerably more.

Two to Four Treatments

Having insured this standard, Studebaker steels then receive from two to four heat treatments.

These treatments refine the steel by completely changing its structure.

Strength or hardness as required in axle shafts or camshafts and gears is doubled or trebled by treatments varying from 600 to 1700 degrees Fahrenheit—their intensity accurately determined by means of the scientific pyrometer which registers for each furnace.

The guarantee of long life, safety and value insured by this process could not be greater in any car you could buy, even if you paid $5000.

Full Floating Rear Axle

Not every "Six" has a full floating rear axle.

But every "Six" needs one.

In the interests of safety, in the interests of power transmission — it is indispensable to the truly scientific "Six."

In the Studebaker SIX the axle carries the car.

The shaft only turns the wheels.

It turns freely, in a steel housing— carrying the last ounce of power TO THE WHEELS.

Without a full floating rear axle the best "Six" motor is not at its best, because the efficiency of the one is dependent upon the other.

Full Equipment of Timkens

No "Six"—no matter what price you might pay—is more thoroughly equipped with Timken bearings than the Studebaker.

Even to the hubs of the wheels this SIX is thoroughly Timkenized.

We have equipped with Timkens at every point where friction is possible—at several points overlooked by other "Sixes."

We repeat—you can't buy greater Timken value in any car.

The Starting and Lighting

Let us not mince words in regard to this Studebaker-Wagner starting and lighting system.

We seriously doubt if it has an equal.

We are certain that it has no superior.

Starting trouble is unknown to Studebaker SIX owners.

You won't—because you can't—better it at any price.

Studebaker SIX Demonstration

The Studebaker SIX will sell itself on demonstration alone.

Demonstration would convince you even if you did not know its internal superiority.

If you did not know the close, fine, accurate manufacturing processes—more than 6,000 in number—embodied in this SIX.

If you did not know that these processes require the combined action of 5,000 separate machines.

If you did not know that accuracy with these machines is carried to the 1-1000 part of an inch in all vital factors of the car.

If you did not know that there are 247 drop forgings in this SIX—more, we believe, than any other car possesses.

If you did not know that we make all parts in our own plants; the magniture of Studebaker operations permitting the most complete automobile and foundry installation in the world, at the lowest cost per "Six" produced.

If you did not know any of these things, still the magnificent smoothness and superabundant power; the beauty, the ease and the luxury of this Studebaker SIX would convince you that it is indeed the king of all light-weight "Sixes."

Vanni Marcoux to Be Married to Rich Widow

Mme. de Morley, Paris Dancer, Also Beautiful

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

PARIS, May 23.—Vanni Marcoux, who was supposed to be desperately in love with Mary Garden last Winter, has consoled himself or else he never needed to be consoled. He is going to be married in June.

He is going to marry a dancer at the Paris Opera, a very wealthy widow, it is said, whose collection of Chinese turquoise lacquey alone is worth a million francs, in addition to numerous other possessions.

All Paris is talking about the romance of Marcoux, the handsome and wonderful baritone, who is the sensation of the Boston Opera season. The lady is Madeleine de Morley—French, despite her name. Rumor says that she is older than Marcoux.

Vanni sheepishly admits that he is in love and is to be married, and when I taxed him with the fact at the rehearsal of "Otello" he introduced me to his financee and made arrangements for an interview with her next morning at her apartment.

MADELEINE DE MORLEY, the wealthy Paris opera dancer who is to become the bride of the baritone next month.

VISIT TO BRIDE-TO-BE.

So, accompanied by Mr. Lowry of the Opera Company, I presented myself at the apartment of Madame de Morley in the Quartier Latin, in the ancient Rue Chausse le Midi, about 11 o'clock of a bright May morning. Like most Paris houses the exterior of Madame de Morley's apartment house does not promise much, but once within the big doorway a pretty interior courtyard came into view and a wide staircase leading to the apartment of the dancer.

A butler took our hats and ushered us into a drawing room fitted up in Louis XV style, but with furnishings which were evidently survivals of that grand monarch, not modern imitations.

Madame de Morley is an attractive woman with the reddish brown hair which is so admired in Paris just now, done with a bang, a fashion which is not so popular. Her smile is very gracious and her pride in being the fiancee of the great baritone immediately evident.

Marcoux arrived a moment after us and in frank French fashion asked us how we thought America would like his wife to be, for he intends to bring her to Boston next season.

"Have you known each other long?" I inquired.

"When the Theatre Champs Elysee opened for the first time last year I was there in a box," declared Madame de Morley. "Mr. Marcoux was also there in the orchestra. He noticed me and asked his friends who I was. I did not see him that evening at all," she declared.

"But other nights I saw that handsome man regarding me, and one of my friends said, 'Why, that is Vanni Marcoux, the great baritone.'

"Meantime I was receiving roses every day, without a card. I was delighted, because I love roses, but it was not for some time that I found out who was sending them to me. Ah, it was a delightful courtship.

"Then Mr. Marcoux went to America and forgot all about his little flirt. Oh, yes, you did," as the big baritone endeavored to protest. "I heard he was going to marry some beautiful American, and I was very sad. But now that he has returned we have definitely decided to marry."

"Shall you give up the stage?"

"Not entirely. To dance it is my life. But I shall travel to America with my husband next season. I am told that one finds wonderful Chinese things in America. Would you like to see my collection?"

Madame led us from her wonderful if rather tomb-like Versailles drawing room with her veritable Eighteenth century treasures into her library. This room was filled with blue China art objects. On the walls the tables and the floor were scores of turquoise parrots, turquoise dragons, vases, idols, dogs, cats, monkeys, platters and other masterpieces of early Chinese art.

"This collection is very, very rare," said Madame. I have been offered as much as 800,000 francs for it, but of course I shall never sell. I have never been to China, but I love Chinese art, and as my collection is famous in France I hear very quickly when a new treasure is discovered.

PROUD OF COLLECTION.

From the China blue room we passed into another furnished with chairs, couches, clocks and other articles which were once owned by Maria Antoinette.

Madame de Morley fluttered around, pointing with pride to everything in her collection. She turned up chairs to show the names of the ancient manufacturers. It is truly an apartment to make an American art collector smack his lips.

"I love this old house," said Madame, "and my one regret at our marriage is that we must seek a large apartment. Here my things are at home. The building itself is three or four hundred years old. In a modern apartment, with what is called modern comfort, these old furnishings would be frightfully out of place. We must seek another old house, Vanni."

"Oui! ma cherie," responded the beautiful fiance.

"We are to be married in June, the month of roses, and our honeymoon will be spent in Deauville, where Vanni is singing," continued Madame.

Plan for Boston College Reunion

More than a thousand friends and alumni of Boston College and Holy Cross College will gather at the new site of Boston College at University Heights, this afternoon at 3 o'clock to inaugurate plans for a monster reunion of the friends of both institutions on June 15. The Rev. Charles W. Lyons, S. J., president of Boston College and other prominent speakers will address the gathering.

The occasion offers an opportunity to the public in general to view the newly decorated interior of the administration building. The interior of the edifice has been beautifully adorned by Rev. Brother Schroen, S. J., who has a national reputation as an artist. The designs of the great library on the first floor and of the Fulton Debating Society Hall on the third are especialy notable.

LONDON, May 23.—The Cabinet Coucil held a long conference on the Ulster situation at the home of Premier Asquith today. Recent developments indicate that another crisis is approaching and this belief was strengthened by an announcement that Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, would return to Ireland immediately.

SUFFRAGISTS HUNT FOR FOE OF QUEEN BESS

Boston Women Denounce Parade Slight to Early Friend of the Cause.

Boston suffragists are all excited—not over who tried to throw stones at Buckingham Palace, but who put Queen Elizabeth—"Good Queen Bess"—out of the recent suffrage parade in Boston.

Every one expected to see Queen Elizabeth impersonated in the parade, but she did not appear.

Miss Margaret Foley, the greatest living authority on suffrage queens of the past and present, said today:

"Queen Elizabeth was an Anti. We know from contemporaries that she made the women around her miserable, when they talked about their rights. If you re-read your history, especially Strickland's History of the Queens of England, you will find that she did everything she could against her own sex and for that reason we would not have her in the Boston parade. It was just the last moment that we found this out and then we concluded not to have any float represent Queen Elizabeth."

QUEEN WAS NO ANTI.

Mrs. Sarah E. Stevens, president of the Historical Homestead Society, Colonial Building, is very much incensed over the failure of Queen Elizabeth to appear in the parade. Mrs. Stevens is an ardent suffragist.

"I know my history just as well as some of the other suffragists," said Mrs. Stevens.

"Queen Elizabeth was not an 'Anti.' I do not see how any woman acquainted with history can say this. Mrs. Strickland in her history denied this fact in the later editions of her work, quoted by Miss Foley.

"Queen Elizabeth put Essex into jail because he talked so much against the women of his day. She was tired out with his twaddle. Now she never would have kept Essex in prison so long and allowed him to lose his head if she had been an Anti. She was no such thing. She was very much of a woamn suffragist. I don't see what the suffragists are thinking of.

VOTE OF CENSURE.

"At our meeting yesterday, we passed this resolution:

"Resolved, That we members of the Women's Historical Homestead Society, at a regular meeting, censure the Massachusetts Women's Suffrage Association for the irretrievable injury they have inflicted on our cause, by leaving the representation of Queen Elizabeth out of the Boston parade.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to headquarters of the Women's Suffrage Association and to the Woman's Journal.

CONGRESSMAN KAHN ASSAILS WILSON POLICY

Californian "Blushes" to Think of Happenings Down in Mexico.

President Wilson's Mexican policy and his stand on the free tolls law, were roundly scored by Congressman Julius Kahn of California at a meeting of the Republican Editors' Association in the American House yesterday.

"As an American citizen I blush for shame when thinking of what has taken place across the border!" Congressman Kahn declared, amid tremendous applause from the hundred present.

"American citizens have been murdered, American women outraged, American property, valued at millions, either stolen or destroyed, while the present administration stood idly by and advised all Americans to come out of Mexico until the trouble was over.

"I don't believe in war. Neither do I believe that war would have been necessary if the President had been firm. He should have told the Mexican people that their nation would be held accountable for every depredation, in the first instance, and not attempt to bolster up a cut-throat like Villa, while denying Huerta recognition.

"It is a humiliating position for the American people to find their President quoted in a widely circulated magazine as lauding Villa, the bandit and merciless murderer, while in the daily papers announcing the coming publication of that indentical interview we find authentic accounts of Villa's officers shooting innumerable officers and men taken as prisoners of war in a battle with the opposing forces.

"If we are ever compelled to declare war against that country, the arms and ammunition furnished this bandit under Wilson's administration will lay low our own boys-in-blue.

"The President's message to Congress relative to the 'tolls law' is based upon the supposition that the law was protested by foreign nations. If any other nation on God's footstool than England made such a protest President Wilson has not made that fact known to Congress to date.

"The one great trouble seems to be that our President is an impracticable theorist. His addresses to Congress read well, and they sound as well as they read. As well-phrased specimens of the English language they cannot be improved upon—but that ends it.

"President Wilson is a high-minded scholar, but his handling of international questions have been so absurdly at variance with reason that we as a nation have become discredited among other nations the world over.

"Had the promises of the Democratic platform been lived up to, and had they kept men busily employed, it would have been impossible to elect so much as one additional Republican to Congress for a decade to come.

"As it is, with the failure of the administration to protect American lives and property across the border, taken with its 'tolls-law-repeal' attitude at England's behest, we have nothing to fear.

SOME TALK OF COOLIDGE FOR GOVERNORSHIP

Republicans Talking; They Don't Mean "Billy" or "Looie," But "Cal."

Hearing yesterday that Republican slate-makers are not quite clear in their minds whether it will be Samuel W. McCall or Alexander McGregor for Governor next Fall, younger men in State politics began to inquire whether it wasn't about time to bring forward the name of Calvin Coolidge.

There were some cheers.

Coolidge is a young man—only forty-two—but a Republican of the old, old school. He is a Republican strong in the faith. He is also a Republican with a backbone and without apologies.

At present Mr. Coolidge is president of the Massachusetts Senate, an organization concerning which the less said the better. The president of the Senate does not choose the members thereof. They are wished upon him by a thoughtless, if not indifferent popular.

"Cal" Coolidge is a Vermonter by birth and a Massachusetts man by choice. He is the only Coolidge in these parts not built along the lines of Mr. Opper's celebrated drawing of the Beef Trust. Calvin is constructed, so far as he goes, on grafton-Cushing lines.

Coolidge is quaint and original. He would be one of the liveliest customers and the greatest drawing cards the Republican stump has seen since Henry Cabot Lodge was a youngster.

Augustus H. Goetting will try for the Lieutenant-Governorship again, notwithstanding the present plan of the machine to give him the elbow in favor of Speaker Cushing. Robert M. Washburn also, is mentioned for second place.

Charles L. Burrill, who last year defeated the machine candidate for the nomination for State Treasurer, will try again. Senator Ward of Buckland may be induced to run in opposition.

W. S. Kinney may once more oppose Secretary of State Donahue and it is announced that Harry C. Atwill, District Attorney for Essex County, has been agreed upon as the Republican candidate for Attorney-General.

Woman's Club Gets Medford Land Title

Before a large gathering of clubwomen of the State federation, the title to land on Gouvenor's avenue, Medford, was yesterday transferred from the General Samuel Lawrence estate to the Medford Woman's Club. The transfer was made by Ernest B. Moore, trustee of the estate, to Mrs. Ella T. Hart, chairman of the clubhouse corporation. The lot contains about 10,800 square feet and cost approximately $3,000. The club proposes to build a $12,000 clubhouse of Colonial pattern. Addresses were made by Mrs. Mary T. O. Brown, Mayor Taylor, Mrs. George H. Folger and Mrs. Clara W. Rockwood.

MAINE RAILROAD AIDS 'FUGITIVE,' SAYS PELLETIER

Prosecutor Demands Roxbury Man Be Returned to Support Three Children.

District Attorney Pelletier and the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad are at swords' points, and all over James E. York, formerly of Roxbury, whom Mr. Pelletier charges with deserting three minor children by a wife who divorced him.

District Attorney Pelletier got an indictment against York and sent Lieutenant Rooney to Houlton, Me., where York is employed by the railroad. Mr. Pelletier claims the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad blocked the legal steps of the State of Massachusetts and he is going to get York in spite of that corporation.

He asked Governor Walsh to apply for extradition. York is married in Maine and has another child. His divorced wife is also married. District Attorney Pelletier claims York must support the three children by his first marriage—two boys and a girl.

Before extradition was applied for the president of the Maine railroad was asked to see that York appropriated part of his $35 a week to prevent his children from becoming wards of the State. The railroad officials not only declined, but are charged with obstructing Lieutenant Rooney in his mission. In 1911 York was haled before the Roxbury court and ordered to provide for his children. He is alleged to have ignored this order and became a fugitive. At that time two officers sent to arrest him were themselves arrested charged with assault because they put the "wristers" on him. The railroad is said to have been active at that time also.

Mr. Pelletier, like District Attorney Corcoran of Middlesex, has started a round-up of delinquent husbands and fathers.

'HONEYBUNCH' IS ASKED SOME QUESTIONS

Veritable Autobiography Called for by Physician She Sues.

Dr. John H. Moore, the Back Bay physician, of No. 419 Boylston street, author of many "Honeybunch" letters addressed to Miss Blanche M. Giles of Brookline, has filed a long list of interrogatories at Dedham in connection with a $10,000 breach of promise suit which the young woman entered against him. The physician has made it a point to ask such questions as will call from the young plaintiff a veritable autobiography in case they are all answered.

The questions indicate that although the physician knows somewhat about "Honeybunch" already, he is desirous of knowing more:

What is your name, where were you born and how long did you live in Marlborough?

By whom were you employed in Marlborough? Give dates and the reason for leaving each. Did you reside at the Y. W. C. A., Warrenton street? How did you come to leave there? Were you treated by physicians at Marlborough? Give their names? Were you treated by physicians in Boston? Give names.

Have you ever brought a breach of promise suit or any other suit for any wrong of any nature done you? When was this, against whom and where? What hotels or restaurants are you in the habit of drinking in? Where and when did you first meet the defendant?

Did you know Dr. Ralph Stevens in Marlborough? Did he treat you professionally and for what? Give his present address. Did you ever reside over night in any Boston hotel? Name the hotels and the names under which you were registered.

Did you ever dine at the Woodcock? How many times and with whom? Did you ever receive a ring, watch or any jewelry from the defendant? State what the jewelry consisted of. Did you work as cashier for Rhodes Bros., Warren street, Roxbury? Where did you live during that period?

Did you become acquainted with an elderly man named Harrington, while you were there? What gifts did you receive from Harrington, including clothing, jewelry, ornaments or money?

Did you know Ethel Marsh Harris while there? Did you dine with her at the Woodcock? Who were your companions there? Do you know Charles Warmouth? Did you frequent hotels with him?

How and when did you become acquainted with Harrington and how long did the acquaintance last? Did you promise to marry Harrington in consideration of $500? How frequently did you call at his apartments?

Did you receive a diamond ring from Robert Stone? Were you engaged to Stone? Did Sheriff Whitman demand from you a ring given you by Stone?

Did you visit a man named Adams at Salem Willows? Were you ejected from his house? Did one Curry visit you regularly at No. 75 Astor street? Did you occupy an apartment with a kitchenette? Who occupied it with you?

To what friend of the defendant did you ever announce your engagement? Name the persons. Did a Mr. Taylor of Marlborough pay you a settlement of a claim you made against him? What was the nature of that claim? Who was your attorney at that time?

Give the address of Mr. and Mrs. Callender, who lived on Warren street, near Rhodes' store. How often and with whom did you dine at the Dreyfus Cafe? Give the address of Mr. Josselyn. Who was matron of the Y. W. C. A. when you were there? Give her address.

When you worked for the Grand Rapids Furniture Co. who was your manager? Where and how long did you live at Salem Willows? State the circumstances under which you left the house when you were visiting at Salem Willows.

Miss Giles in her suit alleges that on July 20, 1909, and other dates at Boston she and Dr. Moore agreed to marry. She says that she has always been ready to keep her agreement, but that he reuses to do so.

GLAD SHE ASKED DR. WILEY ABOUT FRANKFURTERS

Somerville Girl Who Wrote to Food Expert Is Congratulated for Good Sense.

Miss Elizabeth Weeks, twelve-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Weeks of No. 52 Boston street, Somerville, is today receiving the congratulations of friends and playmates because of her foresight in writing a letter to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley of the Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health, Washington, and getting a letter in reply to her quest concerning the advisability of eating frankfurters.

Little Miss Weeks was told by her "papa" that frankfurters were full of poison. Her mamma told her not to eat them. Then the little girl hit upon the idea of finding out for a certainty from Dr. Wiley, pure food expert, whom she had heard of, and wrote him this letter:

LETTER TO WILEY.

We three children like frankfurters for our luncheon, but papa says they are full of poison, and mamma says they are not good for little children to eat. I am twelve, Seth Low is nine and Janet seven. We are very well children and have red cheeks. We know if you say they are good we can have frankfurters once in a while. Please let me know what you think.

Dr. Wiley replied:

Dear Elizabeth Weeks—Will not something else do you for your luncheon in place of the frankfurters? There is no objection to good sausage if it is made from good clean pork in a cleanly way, but unhappily, sausages are apt to be made from odds and ends in a dirty way, and they are rather greasy, rich food for little folks at best.

NAMES BETTER FOOD.

If your parents can make sure that they are getting good sausages, I suppose you might have them once in a while, but peanut butter and apples, graham bread, milk, well-made, clean preserves, all kinds of fruit, eggs and a little good meat cooked at home, so that you know what it is, would, in my opinion, be better for little folks. You would not like to trade your red cheeks for two frankfurter sausages, I am sure. Yours very truly,

H. W. WILEY.

So little Elizabeth is now telling her Somerville friends to "ask Dr. Wiley" when they want to know if food is pure.

Chops Up Again in Spite of Supply

Mutton chops have gone to 35 cents again, with the possibility of a still further jump in price. In spite of heavy arrivals from the South hindlegs and quarters are quoted at 22 cents, with choice pieces bringing as high as 25 cents.

Miss Bateman Gives Parents a Surprise

Remodels Old Newport Inn During Their Absence in South.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 23.—When Miss Dorothy Bateman sent her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Bateman, on a Southern excursion this Spring she prepared a nice little surprise for them on their return. They found that Bateman's Inn had been completely made over and rejuvenated from top to bottom at an expense of thousands of dollars. The inn has always been sort of an aristocratic old place of the kind wealthy Southerners patronised before the Civil War, but was in need of repairs. Her parents agreed that this was altogether the best surprise they had ever received.

"Little Sunshine," as her benefactor, Ross Winans, is said to have described her, is doing a lot of good with her $500,000, besides incidentally have a fine time herself.

Boston American
MONARCH OF ALL NEW ENGLAND SUNDAY PAPERS

Pelletier Calls for Evidence Against Charles S. Mellen

District Attorney Pelletier last night said to a Sunday AMERICAN representative:

"I have read Mr. Mellen's testimony, with care and with interest, describing the sack of the New Haven and the Boston & Maine railroad. IT BEARS OUT WHAT THE BOSTON AMERICAN HAS BEEN ALLEGING FOR MANY YEARS. Such conduct as Mr. Mellen describes on the part of trustees with a sacred trust to manage honestly and decently the money of the people, the savings banks and the charitable institutions, calls for the rigorous punishment of such offenders as have broken the mandates of the criminal law, and as to finances, these laws call for nothing but ordinary honesty.

"If I can obtain jurisdiction, by having shown to me that this series of hold-ups, extortions and conspiracies, or any of them, occurred in Suffolk County, I shall PROSECUTE THEM VIGOROUSLY. I CALL ON ALL CITIZENS to aid the District Attorney by furnishing him further evidence to corroborate and supplement Mr. Mellen's testimony. I shall be glad to ASK FOR A SPECIAL GRAND JURY, if I can discover that any of this series of financial crimes occurred in Suffolk County, and I what I say as to Mr. Mellen APPLIES TO MR. BYRNES AND ALL OTHER OFFICERS, DIRECTORS AND AGENTS of the New Haven Railroad and the Boston & Maine.

"The definition just rendered of larceny and appropriation of funds of a corporation by its officers in the Stephen R. Dow case applies by analogy to the New Haven and the Boston & Maine directors. Larceny is described as no less larceny because it follows the forms of law and an OFFICER CAN STEAL FROM HIS CORPORATION EVEN AS A PICKPOCKET FROM THE POCKET OF THE STRANGER."

DEFEND WORK OF 'CENTRES' FOR SOUTH BOSTON BOYS

Leaders in South Boston Business Deny School Extension Plan Is a "Loafing Place" Where Games Are Taught

Takes Youth Off the Street, Say Defenders of System, Who See Untold Good by Mingling Real Life Pleasure with Profit

South Boston people are aroused over the criticism, attacking the "Evening Centres," the extension work of the Boston public schools in that part of the city.

These centres were criticised in a report given by James A. Keyes at the last meeting of the South Boston Citizens' Association. He declared that the centres were simply loafing places for children, they taught children how to play pool and that the persons having them in charge, A. T. Campbell and Miss Mary Paddon, lacked discipline.

All these charges have been refuted by well known citizens of the peninsular district. Many of them say that it is a political scheme to get votes for a certain man aspiring to be a candidate for school committee.

The chief objections to the centres have come from James A. Keyes and Charles J. Hess, members of the above association, who were appointed upon a committee by the South Boston Citizens' Association, together with James W. Bateman, to investigate the "centres." Keyes and Hess brought in a majority report, but Bateman brought in the minority report which has been accepted by the Citizens' Association.

CALLS ATTACK UNFAIR.

President Michael J. Mahoney of the South Boston Citizens' Association indorses the centres and calls them "one of the best things in their line that South Boston has ever had."

"It is unfair to Mr. Campbell to speak of his work in these centres

Newport Expects War Fleet Back

Big Celebration Planned for Return From Mexico.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 23.—Butchers, bakers, restuarant and saloonkeepers and the whole horde of business houses here are in high glee over the fact that there is a strong possibility that Newport will have the ships of the Atlantic fleet the greater part of the present Summer, after all, and that some of them will come here about the middle of June.

It is planned to reassemble the Atlantic battleships fleet according to the regular program arranged before its presene in Mexico was needed. It is probable that a large fleet of the smaller craft will be retained in Mexican waters.

Wife as Nurse to Jack Cudahy

Will Be in Better Health as a Result of Operation.

PASADENA, Cal., May 23.—It is just learned that "Jack" Cudahy underwent a serious surgical operation last Tuesday at the bungalow in the Hotel Maryland grounds, occupied by the family. Dr. A. B. Coates performed the operation.

Mrs. Cudahy took charge of the nursing, and the patient is now believed to be on the road to recovery, due, the physicians say, to her careful nursing.

Not until the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Cudahy from their usual haunts in Pasadena had aroused curiosity did their friends investigate and learn of the operation.

Dr. Coates says there is no doubt that Cudahy will be in much better health than he has been in some years as soon as he has entirely recovered.

Mrs. Walker Ill, Hearing Goes Over

Arguments Over Custody of Children to Be Made June 1.

PROVIDENCE, May 23.—Arguments on the petition of James W. G. Walker, U. S. N., retired, for the temporary custody of his four minor children, were delayed in the Superior Court today by the illness of Mrs. Walker. Judge Stearns continued the case until June 1.

Mr. Walker secured a divorce and his wife appealed to the Supreme Court. Pending a hearing in the higher court, Mr. Walker wanted the right to care for his children on his farm at North Conway, N. H. He was retired from the navy with the rank of commander.

DOW SENTENCE PUT OFF AFTER BROKER'S PLEA

Facing Long Prison Term, He Begs Time to Fix Up Family Affairs.

GOES TO COURT THURSDAY

Stephen R. Dow, who worked his way up from office boy to be one of the most successful brokers in Boston, made an impassioned plea to the District Attorney's office yesterday afternoon for a few more days freedom before they send him to the State prison for eight or twelve years.

Dow lost his petition before the full bench of the Supreme Court for a new trial. The decision overruling exceptions was handed down Thursday. This meant that the sentence imposed by Judge Brown on March 19, 1913, must go into effect.

It meant that Dow must tear himself away from his wife and son and surrender himself to the court. It meant that he must take his medicine for the verdict which a jury of his peers returned in the Superior Court fifteen months ago, finding him guilty of misapplication of his clients' funds, amounting to nearly $300,000.

DESERTED BY FRIENDS.

Dow's name was placed on the list for sentence tomorrow by Judge Fox in the Second Session of the Superior Court, but as a result of his plea for a few more days of liberty and chiefly because of the absence of his chief counsel, the [illegible] was delayed until Thursday.

Dow called up Assistant District-Attorney A. C. Webber on the telephone. It was Mr. Webber who prosecuted the case which was stubbornly contested at every stage.

"It's all right!" said Dow, his voice trembling. "I'll be on hand. I'm not going to run away. But I wish I could have a few more days. I want to settle my life insurance and other family matters. Just a few days, that's all I ask.

"I have no friends. Those whom I befriended and those I protected have forgotten me. Kind of rough after all I did and all I have borne. But that's the way of the world.

"I understand I must be in court Monday. Notice has been sent. But my lawyer, Attorney Williams, is in Baltimore and cannot be back. May I have just a few more days?"

Assistant District Attorney Webber assured Mr. Dow that the district atorney's office was willing to extend the time a few days under the circumstances. So, although the case has been listed for Monday, it will be put over, and Mr. Dow will not have to report for sentence before Thursday.

OUT ON $25,000 CASH.

He has been out on $[illegible],000 since his conv[illegible] [illegible] his arrest. In fact, wh[illegible] the bonds were increased. After the verdict Assistant District Attorney Webber asked that sureties be increased to $[illegible],000. Dow couldn't raise that amount, but he got enough State Street [illegible] acquaintances together to produce $25,000 in cash, which satisfied Mr. Webber. This money is now held by the District Attorney.

Dow was indicted on ninety-two counts charging him with shuffling accounts of several interlocking enterprises carried by the firm of Stephen R. Dow & Co., of which he was president and the dominating spirit. The jury found him guilty on twenty-four counts. This involved conversion of $239,000 from three of his pet mining companies. The total of ninety-two counts in the indictment involved $[illegible].

MILITANTS TRY TO RUIN WATER SUPPLY OF CITY

Place Bombs Among Glasgow, Scotland, Pipes—Police Raid London Headquarters.

WOMAN FIGHTS IN COURT

LONDON, May 23.—The suffragettes' war was carried on today by both sides unrelentingly.

In Glasgow, Scotland, the militants attempted to destroy the city's water supply.

They placed two large dynamite bombs among the pipes conveying water from Loch Katrine to Glasgow, but the fuses burned out just before their fire reached the detonators.

The police carried their war against the militants into the enemy's camp by raiding the headquarters of the Women's Social and Political Union at King's way house. Arrangements for the raid were made secretly and no intimation of the police plans became known until they descended upon the headquarters.

Leading officers of the organization were arrested and documents and books showing the activities of the militants were seized. The raid is believed to be the first step in a campaign ordered by the government to crush the militants.

No opportunity was given to the suffragette leaders to escape. The buildings was surrounded by a large force of policemen and every means of exit was carefully guarded. While the police were searching for the documents and books that will be used as evidence against the suffragettes, they held their prisoners in the building.

MRS. BRESNAHAN AND CHILDREN.

West Roxbury woman and her babies, Katherine, six months old, and John, four years old, who were taken to police station in patrol wagon

An outrage against two children, the oldest only four years old, came to light in West Roxbury yesterday.

When their mother was arrested on suspicion of having picked flowers in Franklin Park, the two children were placed in the patrol wagon with their mother, taken to the police station, and kept there till the mother was released on bail.

There was no charge against the children. Now a State law passed only a month ago specifically forbids transporting in a patrol wagon any children not charged with crime.

The law was passed as the result of two iniquitous cases, one in Somerville, and the other in Charlestown, where children were hauled away to court in a patrol wagon, because their parents were thought to have neglected them. The AMERICAN protested such action, and the law passage was a result of the AMERICAN'S protest.

Now comes this West Roxbury case, which on careful scrutiny appears to be a violation of the law.

The mother is Mrs. Florence Bresnahan. She is twenty-six, and lives at No. 290 Talbot avenue, Dorchester. She was arraigned in the West Roxbury court yesterday on a charge of violating the park regulations, and

DISTRICT ATTORNEY SEEKS TO PROSECUTE NEW HAVEN LOOTERS

Pelletier Calls on All Citizens Through the American to Present Local Facts and Aid in Bringing Guilty Ones to Justice—Will Ask for Special Grand Jury

Declares Dow Case Ruling Shows That Railroad Robbers Can Be Punished—Declares Mellen's Story Supports Charges Long Made by American—Vigorous Action if Evidence Is Offered

District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier today calls upon all citizens, through the Sunday AMERICAN, for any evidence in their possession touching on the sack of the New Haven and the Boston & Maine properties by the late Mr. Morgan and his crew.

If it is discovered that the scene of any of the extortions, conspiracies and hold-ups described at Washington by former President Mellen were set in Boston, Mr. Pelletier will at once ask for a special Grand Jury.

The District Attorney calls attention to the recent ruling of the Supreme Judicial Court, in the Stephen R. Dow case, that larceny is no less larceny because it follows the forms of law. "An officer can steal from his corporation," Mr. Pelletier says, even as a pickpocket from the pocket of a stranger."

This is the call of the District Attorney on 'all citizens:"

I have read with care and with interest Mr. Mellen's testimony describing the sack of the New Haven and the Boston & Maine. It bears out what the AMERICAN has been alleging for many years.

Such conduct as Mr. Mellen describes, on the part of trustees with a sacred trust to manage honestly and decently the money of the people, the savings banks and charitable institutions, calls for the rigorous punishment of such officials as have broken the mandates of the criminal law; and as to finances these laws call for nothing but ordinary honesty.

If I can obtain jurisdiction, by having shown to me that this series of "holdups," extortions and conspiracies, or any of them, occurred in this county, I shall prosecute them vigorously.

I call on all citizens to aid the District Attorney by furnishing him further evidence to corroborate and supplement Mr. Mellen's testimony.

I shall be glad to ask for a special Grand Jury, if I can discover that any of this series of financial crimes occurred in Suffolk County; and what I say as to Mr. Mellen applies to Mr. Byrnes and all other officers, directors and agents of the New Haven Railroad and the Boston & Maine.

The definition just rendered, of larceny and appropriation of funds of a corporation by its officers, in the Stephen R. Dow case, applies by analogy to the New Haven and Boston & Maine case. Larceny is described as no less larceny because it follows the forms of law; and an officer can steal from his corporation even as a pickpocket from the pocket of a stranger

MELLEN NOT IMMUNE, M'REYNOLDS CLAIMS

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The Department of Justice will contend that Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, who testified before the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning the financial operations of J. P. Morgan and his associates, did not receive immunity by this testimony, and that he is still amenable to the government. Information to this effect was gained at the Department of Justice today.

Mellen was placed on the stand by Solicitor Folk of the commission in direct opposition to the wishes of Attorney-General McReynolds, who desired, it was said, to have Mellen indicted for alleged juggling of the funds of the New Haven road.

When the case is called in the New York court Mellen's lawyers, it is said, will move that their client was entitled to immunity by reason of his testimony in Washington. The Department of Justice will oppose this and will carry the case to the Supreme Court of the United States for a final decision.

Neither physicians' certificates of illness nor any other excuses will be accepted by Solicitor Folk for the non-appearance of William Rockefeller and other [illegible] of the New Haven under subpoena to appear in the commission's New Haven investigation, Solicitor Folk said today.

"If Mr. Rockefeller is able to attend New Haven directors' meetings, as it appears he has done in the last few days, he is sufficiently improved in health to appear in Washington," said Folk.

Under present conditions the chief counsel said William Rockefeller, George MacCulough Miller, Samuel C. Morehouse and H. M. Kochersperger, whom Folk described as constituting the sick list, will have to testify "or suffer consequences." Folk intimated that contempt proceedings might be instituted.

William Rockefeller has notified the commissioner, said Folk, that he is suffering from a throat affection which prevents him from speaking above a whisper. Mr. Miller's ailment, according to Folk, seems to be senility, and Samuel C. Morehouse and H. M. Kochersperger are suffering from [illegible] of the charge against [illegible] whether the children should have been taken to the station in the patrol wagon. The effect of the whole thing was to [illegible] hysterics [illegible]

Here are [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] says:

PICKED APPLE BLOOMS

[illegible] John, who is four [illegible] Katherine, who is six months old [illegible] we went for a walk [illegible] Wellington Hill Mattapan, where [illegible]

"Returning home, we [illegible] Franklin Park [illegible] Patrolman [illegible] Keith of the Franklin [illegible] I was carrying [illegible] The officer spoke [illegible] the flowers [illegible] My husband [illegible] patrolman [illegible] grabbed me violently [illegible] told me I was under arrest.

"My husband pleaded with the officer and asked if an arrest [illegible] to take him instead [illegible] little Johnnie, who [illegible] his heart, went into hysterics [illegible] little Katherine started [illegible] the policeman told me to come [illegible] he would pull me to [illegible] asked him what he expected [illegible] to do with the babies, and he said he didn't know, that I was under arrest.

"When I got to the sub-station [illegible] pleaded with the officer [illegible] it had no effect, and I was [illegible] I was to consider myself under arrest. There, with [illegible] children and my husband, I had to wait for an hour until the patrol wagon came from Jamaica Plain, more than [illegible] away.

"I was put into the patrol wagon and then the two children were [illegible] by the police and my husband also got in and we went to the station on Seaverns avenue where I was brought to the desk. My husband asked the officer in charge not to put me in a cell and I remained in the guard room with the children until he arrived about an hour later with the necessary bail when we went home.

CHILDREN SUPPERLESS.

"To think that I should be accused of such a thing is ridiculous. My husband is going to take the case to the highest tribunal.

"The children were forced to wait until nearly 10 o'clock for their supper because of a mistake the officer made. While we were waiting for my husband to come with bail the, Katherine, the six-months-old baby, was [illegible] to sleep on a table."

Captain Joseph A. Harriman, in charge of the Jamaica Plain and Franklin Park sub-station, said [illegible] while walking his route in the [illegible] Patrolman Keith came across Mrs. [illegible] and her family. She had parts of a brush, termed haw[illegible] there [illegible] some Canadian red buds in her possession. Keith questioned her [illegible] them. He doubted her answers and placed her under arrest [illegible] they went to the Overlook [illegible] sub-station, without any [illegible]

"It was because Keith was not satisfied with her answers and her manner that she was placed under arrest and taken to the station. The children were not touched while on the way to the sub-station by the officer. Later she was brought to the main station."

Patrolman M Adams requested Mr. [illegible] to take the children to their home when the patrol arrived, but he insisted on going and taking the children. [illegible] Adams told him several times, but he said he was going, and they went [illegible] only because he insisted.

Keith has been in the police department for the past thirty years and came to this station fifteen years ago. Since that time he has been assigned to the Franklin Park Station, and is one of the best and most [illegible] officers in the division."

PARK LAWS STRICT.

"The park laws relative to the conduct of people in Franklin Park are very strict. There are many beautiful [illegible] and flowers there and if there were not strict police surveillance over them everything would be destroyed.

"[illegible] ago two [illegible] on [illegible] morning [illegible] up [illegible] trees, and we started [illegible] against the destruction. [illegible] arrests were made, and this has to a large measure put a stop to it."

One hundred and seventy five cash prizes will be given, absolutely free, to the winners.

All employes of the Boston American and their families are absolutely barred from participating in this contest.

Each weekly contest will consist of fourteen puzzle pictures, all to be printed together in the Sunday American, first fourteen pictures, Sunday, May 24.

Participation in any other contest which has been run, which is now running, or which may be run by the Boston American will not debar any one from entering this contest.

Every contestant or any or all members of a family will be allowed [illegible] one SET of answers, but this SET must contain only ONE answer to each picture.

No contestant can win more than one prize, and not more than one prize will be awarded in any one family.

Each and every answer must be neatly written or printed on the coupon furnished by the Boston American in the numbered spaces corresponding to numbers on pictures, or on a page of some book form by itself, accompanied either by the puzzle pictures furnished by the Boston American or a pen or pencil copy thereof, and must have the name, residence, etc., of the contestant on the coupon.

In case there are no complete sets of correct answers, prizes will be awarded to the [illegible] nearest correct solutions, giving weight to skill and judgment.

In case of a tie, awards will be made on the basis of neatness, judgment and exact accuracy, but if the tie cannot be decided in that way the tied contestants will receive similar prizes.

Time will not be a factor in awarding the prizes. The first answers received after the contest closes will stand no better chance of winning a prize than the last answers received, provided they are delivered within the time specified [illegible].

All answers must be delivered to the Boston American Weekly Puzzle Editor at No. 5 Winthrop square, Boston, Mass., in person before Thursday, May 28, at 12 noon, or must be mailed in time to reach the Weekly Puzzle Editor prior to that hour on that day.

The Shubert to See Whirl of New Steps

"Dance of the Tigress" Latest Sensation

Joan Sawyer to Present Array of Fantastic Dancers at the Shubert.

There is no rest for the weary dancers. From one carnival of modern dancing the town passes swiftly to another, with the result that you are now invited to consider Joan Sawyer and her new Spring and Summer styles in the one-step, tango, hesitation and maxixe.

Miss Sawyer will not be alone when she flits upon the stage at the Shubert tomorrow night, for to make sure of her assortment of modern dances she has imported several choice specimens from the cafes and dance halls of Europe. She announces that she is to make her appearance at the Shubert an international affair.

Possibly the most prominent of Miss Sawyer's assisting artists will be Mlle. Louise La Gai, who once had the good fortune to be the prima-ballerina at the Paris Opera House. She not only dances fantastic steps, but she invents them as well, and her "Dance of the Tigress" promises to be a real sensation. To make it more picturesque but also more difficult, of course, she wears in this dance a gorgeous head dress made from the skull of a tiger.

Another importation in Miss Sawyer's company is Senorita Carmencita La Sevilla, a beautiful dark-eyed and dark-haired maid from Spain. She was a dancer at the Royal Opera in Madrid. It is rumored, though not verified, that one night last December she so pleased King Alfonso that he invited her to the royal box and told her, in the language of his country, that she was some dancer.

Quentin Tod is another swift-footed young dancer with Miss Sawyer. Mr. Tod is English and came to this country to dance for Mr. Frohman in "The Sunshine Girl." He was later drafted by vaudeville.

Lucille Pary Hall, in charge of dancing at Le Petit Trianon, will have charge of the amateurs who will enter the competition at each performance. Possibly the best known of the amateurs who will appear is Pauline Chamberlain of Brookline, who, with her brother, William E. Chamberlain, Jr., won the Castle trophy at the Boston Opera House, probably knows more about the fine points of dancing than any amateur in New England. Upon their return from the Castle national tournament in New York the Chamberlains will appear in competition for the Joan Sawyer trophy cup.

Madeline Reed, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burton Francis Reed of Harvard avenue, Brookline, has appeared in several competitions and is expected to give a good account of herself in the Sawyer contests.

Alice Mannix of Cambridge, who has won a great many competitions at Le Petit Trianon the past season because of her mastery of every one of the new dances, is sure to delight her friends with her dancing. Miss Mannix's maxixe is a treat and her tango is a whole evening's entertainment. The competition, however, is limited to one dance, which is to be a combined waltz and one-step. This does not in the least disturb Miss Mannix, as she does them all equally well.

The amateurs will occupy boxes at every performance until the moment arrives for them to show their friends how well they dance.

A silver cup is to be awarded at each performance. The Joan Sawyer trophy cup will be awarded on Saturday evening and will be competed for by those winning at the preceding performances.

Among those society girls who will appear with their partners are Miss Louise Dixon of Clarendon street, Miss Eugenie Cochrane of Dedham, Miss Dorothy Angell of Brookline and Miss Augusta Conley.

SUCCESS
comes from brains, plus energy, plus know-how, plus regular, careful reading of the Sunday AMERICAN Real Estate and Want Ad Section. Why not begin today.

Boston Dance Expert Declares Standard High

By H. P. FARRINGTON.

I have been requested by the editor to deviate from my specialty as a golf writer and give my views on dancing. Without being egotistical, I have also been requested to give my qualifications to act in the capacity of a dancing critic.

In the first place, I have loved dancing from the time I was born, quite as dearly as I have golf and have followed both with equal interest.

In the second place, my vocation has thrown me in contact with a class of people who dance twelve months a year.

Seven Winters at Palm Beach, Ormond, St. Augustine and Jacksonville, Fla., starting January 1st and ending April 1st, have brought me in close contact with people who frequent resorts and represent the leading society or the wealth of every big city in this country, as well as many from foreign lands.

ALWAYS POPULAR.

From the South the migrating resort loving public go to White Sulphur, or Hot Springs, Va., Atlantic City, Asheville, S. C., and numerous other resorts where dancing furnishes the lion's share of the entertaining. Following this route into the Summer months, Bretton Woods, Maplewood, Waumbek, Bethlehem, Profile, Sugar Hill and several other notable points in the White Mountains next furnish a crack sextet, a band, orchestra or a victrola, so that dancing may go on uninterrupted day in and day out. The same story is true in the Adirondacks, with Paul Smith's, Hotel Champlain, Lake Placid and other Summer society rendezvous making dancing their headline attraction.

From the time that the turkey trot became popular and greatly censured three years ago I have seen the gradual development of the art of dancing brought up by amateurs and professionals to the high standard that it has obtained today. The start of the turkey trot was doubtless lowly but society took it up and the ever popular one-step is the direct outgrowth.

At Palm Beach in particular the dancing stands out as the leading attraction, with music and opportunity furnished 2,000 people on a small island. Morning, noon and night it goes on.

It has been my privilege to witness these festivities, and my ideas on dancing are naturally the outcome of many parties where notables executed steps on the floor that are more difficult and intricate than the average noted professional dancer of fame can show. I might go into details and mention names but unfortunately there are not any experts from Boston. New York furnished the most talented group of amateur dancers, and when a Tango or Maxixe was played at Palm Beach it was seldom that more than four couples were on the floor, yet 2,000 others were [illegible] in the throng at the height of the season. Here in Boston just the reverse was what I witnessed at the Copley-Plaza at a The Dansant. The Argentine Tango was played and without any conception of the steps, dozens of couples got on the floor and practiced something, but what that something was only a psychic wonder could tell.

DIFFERENT IN BOSTON.

The reason for this great difference in the conception of the dance in Boston and with that in New York is the difference in the opportunities afforded the public to see dancing and to participate in it.

From the Bronx to the Battery there is dancing in every hotel of any standing, and every cafe. Noon, evening and midnight all have their cabaret shows and teams of artists demonstrate and teach the new dances. Boston doesn't want this amount, but should have a little of it.

The average Bostonian has not seen the dances except as they are shown on the stage, and here is another reason for a wrong conception of one dance in particular—the tango. New York had long since tired of the modern demonstration as a ballroom attraction on the stage and consequently, to attract attention to their act, the professionals put in steps that had no place, but made the dance racy, difficult and an acrobatic stunt, instead of a slow, graceful interpretation of music. It became a theatrical number instead of a tango.

The obvious result is best shown by the press, as hardly a day passes that one may not find the headline "Tango barred."

As a matter of fact this so-called tango is a grand mixture of turkey trot, one-step, maxixe and tango, with the "square" rushed off to fast music, instead of to the strains of "Amapa" or a similar selection.

The tango is announced on the program and a whirlwind dance results, many twists and suggestive squirms with the windup showing the girl in the act upraised off the stage in the man's arms, or swung about hanging on to his neck with both feet off the floor. Naturally mother is shocked and is even more strenuous than ever in her refusals to allow her daughter at high school to dance this vulgar, rough and seductive dance.

MATTER OF PRACTICE.

It was anticipated that "The Castles" would show just what the modern dances were like at the Opera House, but they did not do this exactly. Instead, many stage steps that could not live in a ballroom were done.

The tango and maxixe are wholly a matter of practice, as two mediocre dancers that have danced as partners can make a better impression on the floor than two experts who have never danced together before. Bodily grace, perfect timing of the steps, and a knowledge of the music require many hours of study before anything like perfection can be obtained.

Boston dance enthusiasts have had an opportunity the past week to see all kinds of dancing at the Boston Theatre. Miss Emily Francis Hooper and Ellsworth Cook from the Astor in New York, had fewer stage steps in their numbers than any other team, and very prettily demonstrated the maxixe and tango. Miss Louise Alexander and John Jarrott danced part of their act with little in the way of stage steps, but it was the trick steps and wonderful footwork in many of their numbers that gave them their places in the dancing world.

Those who saw the majority of amateurs work wondered what they were trying to do, or where they could have learned the steps they attempted. The applause that marked the efforts of the various teams on the stage was marked by its sectional rivalry. Starting with the roof and working down one could picture Revere Beach, Roxbury, Everett, Cambridge, Brookline and Boston, with each bit of applause showing just what the various sections of the theatre had learned as the proper way to do the maltreated "tango." Any contortion or variation received storms of applause, and regardless of whether a one-step or couples religiously struggling with waltz was played one could find the true maxixe step, or a single one from the tango.

STANDARDIZE THE DANCE.

Several meetings of the Boston Teachers' Club have sought to standardize the modern dance here. Their demonstrations of the steps of each have received the commendation of the board which sanctions or bars dancing anywhere that they see fit.

The impressions I have set down here are the result of having watched the dancing of those who were known to have "studied abroad," "taken of Maurice," learned from the Castles," etc., who sought out resorts where dancing was the chief amusement.

Dressed as Man to Win Husband Back

Woman Tells of Life in Hunters' Camp When Sheriff Sees Disguise.

FARMINGTON, Me., May 23.—"I wore men's clothes to win back my husband," said Mrs. Georgiana Jameson to Deputy Sheriff Hinds when he found her clad in coat and trousers and a derby hat.

"Better take 'em off and get a skirt," said the sheriff, stroking his chin. "I can't," replied Mrs. Jameson. "They're all the clothes I have.

"You see my husband told me I'd better disguise myself as a man and work at a lumber camp with him. I peeled bark and the men never discovered I was a woman for two years. Jameson wanted me to dress like this, so I cut off my hair and now he's left me."

Jameson denies the woman is his wife.

HOW WOULD YOU WIN BACK YOUR WIFE'S LOST LOVE?

What Gift Would You Send Her? Writer Asks American for Answers.

If you were estranged from your wife for seven months, and were willing to be reconciled to her, how would you go about it?

What little token of your affection would you send her?

What means would you take to assure her that you loved her and wanted the past to be forgotten?

A Boston business man has put these questions before the Boston AMERICAN. His position is such that he cannot reveal his name, but he longs for advice. He believes that there are many others in his position. Some little matter has separated man and wife and some little mark of affection may be able to soothe injured feelings.

WHAT WOULD YOU SEND?

What would you send her on her birthday?

Here is the letter that Boston AMERICAN readers may be able to answer and help make two human beings happy again.

May 19 1914.

Editor of Boston AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I have been living apart from my wife for seven months. Regardless of reasons why this has been necessary, I still care for her and would like to send her some appropriate gift on her birthday which comes soon. Would you care to answer this question of mine? What can I send her so that she will understand that the gift is from the one who should be nearest and dearest to her and yet who is now so far removed from her thoughts and affections. For obvious reasons you, of course, will withhold my name and address. It might be that some of your readers could give me some ideas that would be of great benefit to me.

Very truly yours.

The writer of this letter has been seen and is thoroughly conscientious in his request. He believes that many couples are separated today and just want some little act of affection to win them back again.

The Boston AMERICAN asks its readers to tell what will reconcile this couple?

Consider Protest of Cranberry Men

Cranberry growers the State over are scheduled to be considered by the Massachusetts Congressmen at Washington at 2.30 o'clock tomorrow, in a joint conference called by Congressman Peters to devise ways and means to exempt cranberry barrels from the "standardized barrel" act. It is held that the enforcement of a law compelling cranberry growers to use barrels of standard shape would ruin their business.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We eat too much meat, which clogs Kidneys, then the Back Hurts.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

SUMMER RULES BY HEALTH BOARD TO GUARD BABY

Dr. Gallivan of the Child Division Warns Mothers Against Impure Air and Milk.

Keep baby cool with one garment.

Wash baby all over every morning.

If baby is sick, don't force it to take food, but stop feeding it except with water, then call your doctor or go to some children's hospital or dispensary.

These are the few simple rules which Dr. William J. Gallivan, chief of the Division of Child Hygiene of the Boston Board of Health, has given out to prevent any increase in infant mortality.

METHODS ARE APPROVED.

Boston was praised during the week by Dr. J. Whitridge Williams, dean of John Hopkins Medical School, in his address before the Women's Municipal League in Huntington Hall, for the methods it has pursued in decreasing infant mortality. This city is far ahead, in this respect, of many other cities and is near the head of the list, being third.

"Every mother with her infant can overcome the difficulties of warm weather if these simple rules are followed closely," says Dr. Gallivan.

"Mothers should nurse their babies for a period of twelve months. Do not wean a baby in hot weather. Never wean a baby less than a year old, except at the doctor's advice:

"Nurse baby regularly, never more than once in two hours. Baby should sleep six hours or more each night without being waked.

"Wake baby promptly, if asleep, when the regular time for nursing comes. Give baby all the cool boiled water it wants. Flannel shirts in Summer bring prickly heat.

"If you think that you cannot nurse your baby enough or at all, consult a doctor before making any change. Buy good, clean milk. Get it prepared from the milk stations. Keep milk covered and clean. Put it in clean bottles. Never use a feeding bottle with a tube on it. Never give baby cheap dirty milk or coffee, beer, syrups or solid food.

KEEP WINDOWS OPEN.

"Keep windows open, sleep with baby on the roof or in the yard, if possible. Baby should sleep alone in the house and in the coolest, quietest room. Keep baby out of the kitchen. Keep flies away from baby. Give baby all the fresh air you can daily.

Duffy's Her Standby at 61

The utility of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey in bringing prompt and effectual relief is again clearly demonstrated in Mrs. Mahan's case.

"I am sixty-one years of age and for many years was so afflicted with chronic indigestion and nervousness that it was impossible for me to retain any solid foods in my stomach. Medicines prescribed by my physician were of no benefit and home remedies suggested by kind friends helped me none, and I became so despondent as to give up all hope of ever being well again.

"How fortunate I was in being persuaded by a friend to try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey four years ago can best be testified to today by my being able to eat whatever I desire and enjoying restful nights of peaceful slumber. Have used your remedy as prescribed since my first trial and today Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is my standby.

"Thinking of others who may be suffering as I did and wishing to let them know what your great medicine did for me, I take the liberty of writing you these facts, which you may use as you wish."—Mrs. Anna Mahan, 856 Eighth Avenue, New York City.

BOSTON OPERA AND RUSSIANS IN COMPETITION

Unusual Success for Season in Paris Promised Henry Russell's Stars.

STRAUSS IS CRITICIZED

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

PARIS, May 15.—The Russian season has commenced at the Paris Opera, and the Boston Opera Company at the Theatre Champs Elysee, for the next three weeks will have to encounter fierce opposition.

Not only is the full force of the Russian ballet employed, but Richard Strauss has been imported to conduct, and a Strauss ballet, "The Legend of Joseph" given its premier.

Prices for the Russian season are sky high. The normal prices at the opera are 20 francs for orchestra chairs. At the Boston Opera in the Champs Elysee the seats cost 30 francs. The Russian season has seen the cost of seats soar to 50 francs, and premiums of 50 francs were offered for seats for the opening night

Henry Russell deftly changed the third performance of "Otello" with Melba, Fontana, and Marcoux so that it would not conflict with the Russian opening on May 14 and gives his fourth premier, "The Ballo in Maschera" of Verdi on Saturday night the 16th of May

Despite the invasion of the Russians business continues good at the Champs Elysee, and it can almost be positively stated that the Boston company will return to Paris next year.

PROSPECTS ARE GOOD.

In four weeks the Boston company is reported to have taken at about ten performances close to 150,000 francs, and the prospects of doing 500,000 francs during the ten weeks is considered excellent. If the receipts equal this sum there will be no deficit of any consequence, and the backers of the enterprise are extremely cheerful

As it was freely predicted before the Boston company came here that it would not do 100,000 francs during its entire season, and as it did 50,000 francs with two performances of "Otello," it can be seen how things are going.

As I explained in a previous letter, operatic expenses in Paris can almost be reckoned on the principal that a franc will go as far as a dollar in Boston.

The "Ballo in Maschera" is being done with Maggie Teyte, Emmy Destinn, Martinelli and Ancona in the cast. Russell intended to have Amato, but he did not arrive in time, and tried to secure George Baklanoff, who has German engagements. Baklanoff, however, is likely to appear later in the season, and Amato is scheduled for several appearances.

While the Boston Opera enterprise is very economical the expenses of the Russian ballet are very large.

STRAUSS VERY GRUFF.

Richard Strauss is said to be getting 100,000 francs for his participation in the affair, in addition to the royalties upon his ballet. When Strauss took command of the orchestra at the opera he almost caused a riot by the gruffness and arrogance of his bearing at rehearsals. The French musicians, not very tolerant of a German under any circumstances, finally mutinied. Herr Richard saw his 100,000 francs go glimmering, so he came to his senses, made a speech in which he lauded French musicians to the skies and blamed his manner upon the military discipline under which German musicians play.

The ballet itself tells the story of the temptation of Joseph by the wife of Potiphar, his condemnation to death by fire because of his refusal to accept the lady and his rescue by an angel. The scenery is by Bakst, whose settings are familiar in Boston, since they were used by Pavlowa last season

Ballet music has been despised by Teutonic musicians as too trivial for their talents. Strauss has not written ballet music in the accepted sense. It is another big tone poem, illustrated by the scenery and the dancers. All the marvelous art of the Russians is necessary, by the way, to dance to this music, which is typically Strauss. The tone is thick, the voice of the orchestra is tremendously heavy, and, while the rythms are active enough, it is not the sort of music that one would wish as an accompaniment of dance. Of course, it is not an accompaniment; quite the contrary. It is the dancers who accompany.

CRITICIZES STRAUSS MUSIC.

The thing is impressive, like all Strauss works, because of its monstrosity, and there are places that are most stunningly effective. Its weakness is the impotence of Strauss when it comes to writing the fascinating, bewitching, feet-twitching melodies that should accompany this sort of dancing

His themes, like his waltz melodies in "Rose Cavalier" have little intrinsic beauty. They are like ugly women dressed in gorgeous clothes

The Frenchman in his new mood of admiring all that is not melodious is rhapsodizing just at present over this latest Strauss performance, but if you heard some of the things that are being turned out by modern French composers and are getting serious additions at the Opera and Comique, you would not take much stock in French criticisms.

Which reminds me of a gentleman in "Le Journal," I think it was, who said, speaking of "L'Amore de Tre Re": "There is not much originality in it. Not that I consider this an important failing, because I consider originality a matter of minor importance in musical composition."

Evidently the French composers take him at his word, for almost every New French work is full of plagiarisms, Massenet and Debussy being the chief victims. I saw an opera called "The Dancer of Tanagra" the other day in which our old friend of the Boston Opera, Zina Brozia, was the chief figure. If Massenet came back to life and removed his property the composer would not have a dozen bars left of his score.

Sunday Work at Scituate Stirs the Pious and Impious

Bungalow Builders Point to Tennis Games Back of the Church.

Right at the opening of the Summer season down on the South Shore life there is being complicated by the Sunday work problem.

Complaint is made:

That sundry newcomers, having bought small lots of land, are putting up modest bungalows and cottages thereon.

That they rush down there Saturday afternoons, change into overalls and jumper, grab hammer, saw and chisel and do their own house-building.

That they keep this up until sundown Sunday evening.

That the Sunday work is wicked and imperilling the soul of the builder.

There is talk, therefore, of speaking to the Selectmen about it.

But—

Others say that the following "real" reasons are back of the kicking:

That the Scituate "native" workman, the carpenter, plasterer, builder and so on, is sore because these newcomers are building their houses themselves, instead of hiring the jobs done.

That the native talent is losing a lot of work thereby, with consequent loss of earned moneys.

That the "natives" make noise enough themselves on Sunday, if they feel like it.

That those who like to go to the tennis court on Sunday for a bit of recreation shouldn't "holler" at a little Sunday carpenter work.

The fact that the tennis court is located right back of one of the churches, the newcomers say, doesn't make the Sunday games a bit more pious.

Wherefore a lively season is anticipated for Scituate.

HARVARD PRIZE TO HARVARD KINSMAN FOR BRITISH POEM

It took one of old John Harvard's descendants to come across the water to Harvard College and show the Boston "Brahmins" how to win the Boylston speaking prize with a regular "red blood" poem.

Lionel de Jersey Harvard, none the less.

And the poem he chose for the speaking competition was "The Highwayman" by Alfred Noyes.

God Save the King!

None of your musty old historical essays for Lionel de Jersey Harvard. Nor any of your classics, or elegant, delicate sonnets.

Give him the good, blooded poem of the highwayman and how Bess, the landlord's daughter, shot herself to save his life—regular "thriller," just like a "movie."

By his spirited recital of the poem he selected young Mr. L. de J. Harvard secured one of the first $50 prizes. The other first was taken by Tallman C. Brookhout, '15, of Roxbury, who recited "Intervention With Cuba," by John M. Thurston.

It was another victory, too, for Alfred Noyes' "live stuff." The author of "The Barrel-Organ," "Silk O' The Kine" and other poems of love and blood and hearts-a-bustin' is admired by thousands for the bold, free swing of his style.

Take "The Highwayman," for instance.

There are seventeen stanzas in the two parts. In the first part the highwayman rides at night to the old inn and kisses Bess, the landlord's daughter, while Tim, the ostler, listened "white and peaked."

The Highwayman is out for a booty. But he promises Bess he will be back before dawn, saying

"Yet, if they press me sharply, and harry me through the day,
Then look for me by moonlight,
Watch for me by moonlight,
I'll come to thee by moonlight, though hell should bar the way."

The highwayman did not come back that night, but the next day soldiers came, King's redcoats, who undoubtedly had been informed by Tim, the jealous ostler. The soldiers seized Bess, gagged her and bound her to the foot of her own bed, to await the highwayman's coming, while they knelt by the casement, with loaded muskets.

For a "sniggering jest" the soldiers had bound a musket beside Bess, with the barrel beneath her breast, telling her to keep good watch. They even added insult by kissing her. Then they began watch through the night, with the helpless girl waiting for her lover to be shot when he came to her window

DIES TO WARN LOVER

After hours of twisting and straining her fingers Bess managed to get one finger to the trigger of the musket whose barrel was bound beneath her breast. Thus she waited. Hoof-beats were heard. The soldiers made ready Then——

"Tlot-tlot, in the frosty silence!
Tlot-tlot, in the echoing night!
Nearer he came and nearer! Her face was like the light!
Her eyes grew wide for a moment: she drew one last deep breath,
Then her finger moved in the moonlight,
Her musket shattered the moonlight,
Shattered her breast in the moonlight and warned him—with her death."

The highwayman heard the shot and galloped away. But at dawn he heard how Bess had died to save him. Back he raced, attacked the soldiers, and died "shrieking a curse to the sky."

Regular tip-topper, what!

Death Shot Haunts Princess

Indian Girl Drops Rifle Forever

Held on Manslaughter Charge

PRINCESS WAU-NETAH AND TRAGEDY DIAGRAM

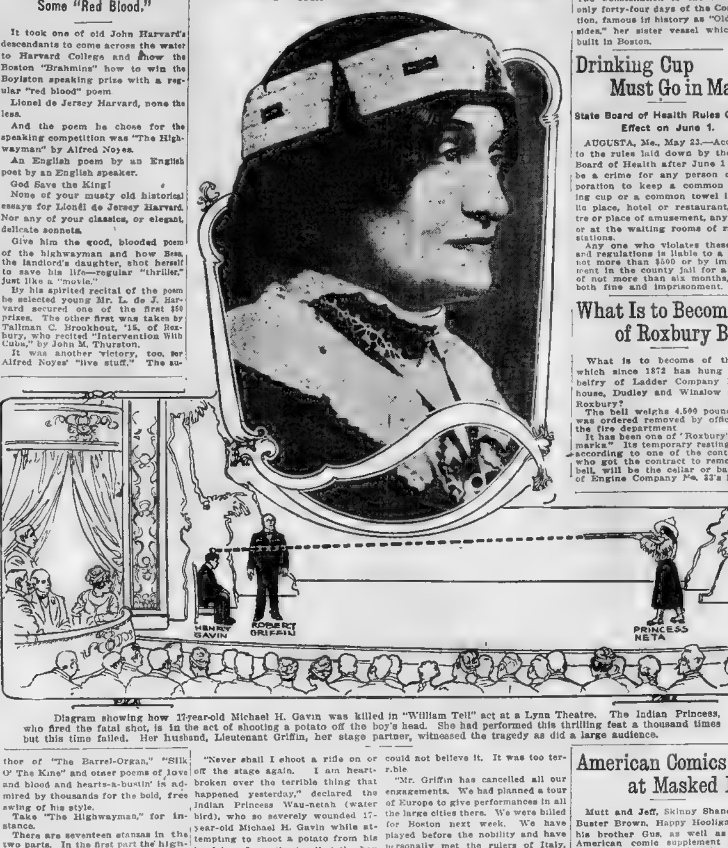

Diagram showing how 17-year-old Michael H. Gavin was killed in "William Tell" act at a Lynn Theatre. The Indian Princess, who fired the fatal shot, is in the act of shooting a potato off the boy's head. She had performed this thrilling feat a thousand times but this time failed. Her husband, Lieutenant Griffin, her stage partner, witnessed the tragedy as did a large audience.

"Never shall I shoot a rifle on or off the stage again. I am heartbroken over the terrible thing that happened yesterday," declared the Indian Princess Wau-netah (water bird), who so severely wounded 17-year-old Michael H. Gavin while attempting to shoot a potato from his head in a Lynn theatre that the boy died.

As a result of the shooting the Princess was arrested charged with assault with a dangerous weapon. The charge afterwards was changed to manslaughter. She was held in $500 for the Superior Court.

"This is the end of Mr. Griffin's act and my own," said the Princess. Lieutenant Robert A. Griffin, her husband, who is a retired United States army officer, will withdraw from the stage.

"I am stunned by this awful accident. If I should ever be called upon to go into a public place to talk of the Indians and their history I shall have it announced far and near that there will be 'no shooting' in the entertainment.

"I shall never forget the horror of that evening when the boy stood in front of me and, as I fired, fell to the stage floor. I was dazed. He had stood for the act during two performances previously, smiling and as serene as could be. I can remember as plainly as if it were now how he smiled at me as I raised my gun.

"You remember how William Tell shot the apple from the head of his son with an arrow?" The act was much after that nature only I was to shoot a potato from the head of the boy with my rifle.

"I am the daughter of Big Tree, chief of the Comanche Indian tribe. I learned to shoot almost before I could run. I have shot with the rifle all my life and I have done the same act with my husband facing me with the potato on his head thousands of times.

"Then the boy came forward. I thought that he seemed a little different from the other two times—a little more disturbed, perhaps, but hardly noticeable. Indeed it may have been only a fancy, for I have always been careful—oh, more careful than you could believe.

"When I saw him on the floor I could not believe it. It was too terrible.

"Mr. Griffin has cancelled all our engagements. We had planned a tour of Europe to give performances in all the large cities there. We were billed for Boston next week. We have played before the nobility and have personally met the rulers of Italy, Germany and France. It is all past now I couldn't bear to go in public now We may travel to forget what has taken place But I feel that the memory will be a lasting one."

Young Gavin, who lived at No. 216 Chestnut street, Lynn, and was an usher at the theatre, died on Wednesday at the Lynn Hospital. The manager of the theatre where the shooting took place was arrested and the theatre was closed following Davis' death

PIMPLES ON HEAD ITCHED DREADFULLY

Spread All Over Scalp, Itching and Burning. At Times Sleep Impossible. Hair Fell Out. Doctor Said Try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In Five Weeks Cured.

c/o S S. "City of Memphis," Lewis Wharf, Boston, Mass.—"Some time ago I had great trouble with sores on my head. At first they seemed to be pimples or small bumps or something of that sort. They itched dreadfully and I scratched them making them sores. In a short time they spread out all over my scalp forming large sores. The corruption from the sores was a kind of yellowish matter or pus. The itching and burning caused me to lose a great deal of rest; at times sleep was impossible. My hair began falling out gradually. It seemed to be almost lifeless.

"I tried several different remedies for the trouble but did not get any relief from any of them. Friends advised this and that but nothing would stop the cause of the itching or in any way heal the sores. Finally my doctor told me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. At night before I went to bed I washed my head with Cuticura Soap and lukewarm water, dried it with a towel and then applied the Cuticura Ointment. Upon arising in the morning I would again wash my head with Cuticura Soap and warm water. After doing this three days my head began to feel relieved and the itching and burning stopped. After using Cuticura Soap and Ointment for five weeks I was cured." (Signed) Karl A. Mallette, Sept. 15, 1913.

AMERICAN GIRLS WITH TITLES TO VISIT NEWPORT

Many Former Society Belles Are Coming to Visit with the Noblemen They Wed.

NEWPORT, May 23.—Advance announcements just made here show that famous Newport beauties who married titles are to visit here this season in such numbers that a Summer of unusual brilliance and gayety is assured. "My Lady This" and "Her Grace of That" will beam on Newport in all their aristocratic splendor.

Among the titled visitors whose advent is most eagerly awaited are Count and Countess Guy de Lasteyrie. The Countess was formerly "Connie" Warren, the athletic girl whose only rival in out-door sports was the wonderful Miss Eleonora Sears of Boston. The Count and Countess have promised to come over from their picturesque chateau in France to visit the Countess' parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Henry Warren.

And "Millie" Sherman, too. Only it will be most presumptuous to call her "Millie" unless one is an intimate friend. For she is Lady Camoys. She and Lord Camoys are expected in August, to visit Lady Camoys' mother, Mrs. Watts Sherman.

ROUND OF FESTIVITIES.

A tremendous round of festivities is scheduled for their sojourn here. Mrs. Sherman, one of the richest widows in Newport, is a notable entertainer and on the occasion of Lord and Lady Camoys' visit, is bound to keep the Sherman villa on Shepherd avenue the centre of a whirl of hospitality.

Then, too, the Duchess of Marlborough (Consuelo Vanderbilt) and her two sons, the Marquis of Blanford and Lord Ivor Spencer Churchill, are booked for a few weeks at Marble House as guests of the mother of the Duchess, Mrs. Belmont, the suffragist.

The Duchess of Roxburghe (May Goelet) wants to come over this season, not having visited Newport since her marriage a dozen years ago.

The Earl and Countess of Granard (Beatrice Mills) are due this season for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills at Sea View villa. The Countess, who is a shining light in English society, has not visited Newport since her marriage on January 14, 1909.

COMING FROM ITALY.

Count and Countess Della Cherardesca (Harriet Taylor) are expected over from Florence to visit Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor, who have recently returned from Europe themselves.

The Count and Countess Del Sera, who are to take a Newport cottage this season, will be new-comers in the cottage colony, the Countess being right in the set with Mrs. Herbert Shipman, Mrs. Sidney Jones Colford, Jr., Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas, Mrs. Gordon Douglas, Mrs. H. Pierrepont Perry and Miss Louise Scott.

Newport had hoped for a visit from Queen Eleanore of Bulgaria, but now report says she has decided not to come to America until later

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Phillips Hatch are to return from Europe in ample time for the season. Mrs. Hatch was formerly the Baroness Marie Wilhelmina van Haeften of The Hague. She was born in Java and is a daughter of the late Baron John Cornelius Adrian van Haeften of Holland.

FISH EXCHANGE PROTESTS IT IS "NOT A TRUST"

Only Demand Is That Standard of Sanitation Be Maintained by Rivals.

Members of the New England Fish Exchange take exceptions to the statement of John White, Jr., of the Mercantile Wharf Corporation that the Exchange is an organization to unlawfully control prices and prevent competition. Mr. White's implication that the dealers at the new South Boston pier are pulling wires to influence city and State officials against wholesale fish houses elsewhere on the waterfront is scoffed at.

"What the dealers now doing business at the new wharf demand is that fish houses elsewhere shall maintain the same high standard of sanitation that is maintained here," said a prominent dealer at the new wharf yesterday.

"The dealers here have put themselves to great expense to build and equip a rat-proof and germless fishmarket, in response to oft-repeated complaints from the health authorities that T Wharf and its surroundings were unfit for the purposes of landing, storing and packing fish. Besides the great initial expense of building the pier and superstructure, our running expenses are double or treble what they were on Atlantic avenue.

"It only seems reasonable, therefore, that fish markets elsewhere in Boston should be compelled to toe the same mark. To permit others to occupy the quarters from which we were driven out is manifestly unfair."

Boston Immigration Station Is Held Up

Boston's proposed immigration station cannot be started for months to come, because the appropriation at Washington is insufficient, although the plans have been drawn and approved by the Federal authorities, according to word received from the Immigration Bureau recently.

Aged, Wrinkled Faces Easily Rejuvenated

An aged face is often only a mask to a comparatively youthful person. Beneath is a countenance young and fair to look upon. It's a simple matter to remove the mask. Ordinary mercolized wax, to be had at any drug store, gradually absorbs the worn-out surface skin; in a week or two the user has the loveliest pinky white complexion imaginable. An ounce of the wax usually is sufficient to complete the transformation. It is put on at night like cold cream and taken off in the morning with warm water

This remarkable treatment is invariably effective, no matter how muddy, sallow or discolored the complexion. Freckles, moth-patches, liver spots, pimples, blackheads and other cutaneous blemishes, naturally vanish with the discarded skin.

To remove wrinkles, here is a recipe that cannot be too highly recommended: Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½-pint witch hazel. Use as a wash lotion. It acts instantaneously and is wonderfully effective. --ADVERTISEMENT

'BUTTER'N'EGG' LINE TO GET A FRESH CHANCE

Citizens to Buy and Operate Defunct Dedham & Frank[illegible] Street Railway.

The little "Bu[illegible] line from Dedha[illegible] Medfield—the [illegible] line possible, but a poor provider from a financial standpoint—is to be given another chance to make good.

It is the shortest separate trolley system in the State, nine miles long.

It is fondly styled the "Butter'n'egg" [illegible] because the [illegible] tors and motormen do all sorts of errands for the people along the route [illegible] [illegible] for the [illegible]

CITIZENS TO BUY IT.

Inspired by local pride citizens of these towns have come forward with thousands of dollars to buy the road just in time to prevent the rails from being torn up and sent to the scrap pile.

All Winter the town of Westwood was marooned from the rest of the world as far as public conveyance was concerned, the road having been closed in the Fall and not opened [illegible] until May because of the lack of funds.

Now the people are to take the road into their own hands. Enough money has been raised to buy the car line as soon as a clear title can be secured.

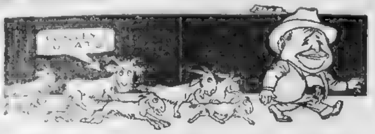
Lowell Bank to Pay First Dividend

LOWELL, May 23.—The Traders' National Bank, the failure of which several months ago startled this city, will pay its first dividend amounting to 50 per cent. to depositors [illegible] day. Announcement [illegible] effect was made today by Receiver Murray. The dividend will amount to $1,550,000.

Many Bruised as Car Strikes Wagon

Several passengers in a South Boston electric car were severely shaken up and bruised yesterday when a wagon owned by the Waldorf Lunch Company collided with the car at Washington and Bromfield streets. William P. Beldeck, the driver of the wagon, was hurled to the street by the impact. His injuries were not serious.

WHICH ONE OF FITZ' JABS GOT CURLEY'S GOAT?



[illegible] was the particular thing in ex-Mayor Fitzgerald's [illegible] Boston Chamber of Commerce "Gamble" which got [illegible] goat?

[illegible] said a good many things. His speech was one jab at Mayor Curley after another. One of these jabs "got under the Mayor's skin," so to speak, so that he left the banquet room.

What was the jab that did the trick?

Ex-Mayor Fitzgerald impersonated Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, an appointee of the Mayor. Among the more biting sarcasms of the ex-Mayor's speech—up to the time Mayor Curley quit the room—were these:

> I rise to denounce with all the words and vigor at my command the charge that there are no first-class political grafters in the city.
> * * *
> By my administration, I mean the administration of myself, John A. Sullivan, assisted by James Michael Curley.
> * * *
> We have uncovered rottenness until the health department is unable to furnish the needed fumigation.
> We have discovered that the Widow Pagett has a swan-boat contract in the Public Garden which fairly reeks with graft, for she only pays $300 a year and she should pay at least $30,000 in order that she may owe us money.
>
> We have discovered that doctors in the service of the city were receiving $500 a year, and that nurses were being paid the exorbitant salaries of $75 a month, while piano players were getting $1.50 a night. We have removed that graft without compunction.
>
> * * *
> We intend to review our achievements for less than thirty cents.
> * * *
> Mayor Matthews was the best Mayor that Boston ever had up to the time that our administration began.
> * * *
> When we took office in City Hall we found only $72.43. There should have been a balance of $750,000. What became of it?
> * * *
> We are sparing no pains to reduce the cost of butter, eggs and other food in the hospitals and homes supported by the city.
> When I should have been permitted to devote my whole time to seeing that my Harvard halo was on straight, I was compelled to listen to attacks and revilings by Alderman Curley and others who would not or could not understand me.
> * * *
> Standing on the summit of Mt. Perfection, I can point to my latest convert, Mayor Curley, with one hand; to my own sublime achievement with the other, and say approvingly: "Can you beat it?"
> * * *
> There is no greater reformer in the world than James M. Curley, with one exception. I am the exception.
> * * *

At this point Mayor Curley couldn't "stand the gaff" any longer and left the table.

"There has been a continuous improvement in the [illegible] pany as well as in the [illegible] foreign companies in which it is interested. RESERVE BANK TO END PANICS, STATES GASTON

"Will Make It Easier for Business Men to Get Money in Time of Depression."

"ENDS WORRY OF HONEST"

"What is the man in the street, the layman, the plain business man, to understand is the meaning of the Federal Reserve Bank, a branch of which is soon to be established in Boston?" was the question put yesterday to Colonel William A. Gaston, president of the National Shawmut Bank, by a reporter for the Boston AMERICAN.

Colonel Gaston's explanatory answer was as follows:

"The business man will understand more easily and directly what the Reserve Bank will mean when the next period of financial uneasiness or panic if you will, comes upon us. Then the business man who has sound credit will find how much this Reserve Bank can do to relieve the situation so far as it affects him in his own business affairs. Money will be easy to borrow, there will be ample money on hand to care for all emergencies and, therefore, there need be no panic.

"There is a notion that the Reserve Bank will change the relations of the individual banks with their private customers. It will not at all affect or change those relations.

"But it will change the relations of the banks toward one another. There will be no more pulling apart by banks as in the old days of panics. Banks, on the contrary, will be brought together more. There will be team work.

"The Reserve Bank will introduce new elements into the American banking system.

"When the bank is established, a customer, who commands credit, can go to his bank and borrow money more freely than he does now, [illegible] what is of vastly more importance he will be able to borrow in time of business depression. There will be no scarcity of money for business loans.

"Business banks need worry no more about meeting sudden demands from its depositors. In a word, the day of the bank-run is past. This applies, of course, only to the institution doing a legitimate banking business.

"Such a bank and none other can be included as a customer of the reserve bank, will always be in a position to re-discount its notes and get cash from the Federal Reserve Bank in the form of new bank currency, issued on the basis of commercial paper.

"The Reserve bank will take the notes and bills of exchange of its customers, endorse them, and give them the money, with sixty or ninety days to run.

This will be a great help to wholesale houses throughout the country. The retailer will not, in future, be able to say to the wholesaler that he cannot get accommodations from his home bank to pay cash.

"If he advances such an excuse as this he will be simply giving warning that his credit at home is none too good."

Asked how soon the Boston Reserve Bank will be ready for operation, Colonel Gaston said it may be three weeks and it may be three months. Everything will depend on how quickly organization is perfected at Washington.

"There will be no new building needed, nor elaborate bank quarters. The customers of the Reserve Bank will not exceed 500, and may fall below that number. It will start operations, I believe with 460 local banks as its customers. It may be months, perhaps years, before some of those banks will find it necessary to come [illegible] to collect w[illegible] [illegible]"

COPPER METAL.

Towards the end of [illegible] week the [illegible] copper [illegible] has [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to a [illegible] 14¼ [illegible] [illegible] that dome[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] supplies for the immediate future with their trade as dull as it is. Sheet copper prices [illegible] an other quarter cent per pound, making the second cut within a fortnight. Current prices are, sheets 19⅛c, rolls 17¼c.

MONEY MARKET.

There was little change to chronicle as to rates [illegible] [illegible] ing to the money market at the end of the week. The tone was easy. There was little demand for accommodations. It is expected that exportation of gold will continue this week. It would cause no surprise if the movement should total a large sum. It seems to [illegible] with indifference [illegible] and speculative [illegible] try is suffering more [illegible] demand for goods th[illegible] [illegible] ty of money.

COTTON ACTIVE, HIGHER LAST WEEK

B[illegible] Weather and Increasing De[illegible] [illegible]d Point to Exhaustion of the Supply.

By [illegible]DWARD LOW RANLETT.

The upward movement in prices [illegible] combination of two important fundamental influences, coupled with a narrow market condition and previous lack of public interest or speculation.

Crop news, which has steadily been a menace to the hopes of ultimate change for the better. While, on the other hand, mill takings in [illegible] and as from [illegible] day reported point strongly to a severe exhaustion of the world's supplies of American raw material.

[illegible] out that, notwithstanding trade in cotton goods is below normal, spindle activity and volume of output are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] prices [illegible] [illegible] not [illegible] 50 per cent. above [illegible]

PRICES STILL TOO LOW.

Fifteen million bales of good cotton for the season to come would not cause lower prices, and on the contrary [illegible] [illegible] that [illegible] three years in the minds of the trade, present prices are still too low.

The Government report on conditions of the crop under cultivation will be issued June 1. The percentage will compare with a condition of 79.1 last year.

[illegible] crop may improve during June and July, but from the present outlook the start will be one to three weeks late, and to this extent will have difficulties of a kind which will work against it. Such replanting will be necessary in Texas, where entirely too much rain has fallen.

EASTERN BELT NEEDS RAIN.

The Eastern belt needs rain, in some districts urgently, and the plant has not yet secured a growth which can be called satisfactory. The crop, therefore, as a whole, is not likely to have a percentage reported which will place it among those which have [illegible] yield per acre.

Friday's statistical report showed approximately 2,815,000 bales of American cotton as held in the world's visible supplies, against 2,545,000 bales on the same day last season. The price of cotton is now over $5 per bale higher than a year ago, but this is all the more significant of what might take place should the coming crop not largely exceed the growth of 1913-14.

Sentiment in Wheat Now More Bearish

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, May 23.—The wheat market at Chicago is likely to show a lack of interest unless there are additional and well-founded reports of crop losses in the Southwest.

It looks now as if scalpers are to run the market for a time, as the public, with the profits to their credit, are keeping out of their holdings, are not likely to re-enter the speculative arena unless there are inducements for them to do so.

Stocks Rise at Weekend Session

Stocks signalized the final session of last week by moving upward, and the bullish sentiment was largely created by rumors that the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to allowing Eastern railroads higher freight rates is now not far off. The rise in the valuation of issues is predicated upon the assumption that the increase will be granted. There was considerable covering of shorts yesterday. Traders indicated by this that they expect better sentiment at the beginning of the week.

Steel, the market leader, rose to the highest point it has recently attained, closing at 63¼ for a gain of 1⅛. This was induced mostly by optimism expressed by Chairman Gary and President Farrell of the United States Steel Corporation. Both gentlemen believe that all business is going to improve. They are, like the late Mr. Morgan, bulls on the future of this country. Judge Gary, like many railroad officials, is impressed by the magnitude of crop prospects.

The New York market was active for a Saturday, transactions totalling around 103,000 shares in two hours. Prices were around the top for the day at the close. Issues, besides Steel, to be conspicuous for strength, included Amalgamated, Baltimore & Ohio, Canadian Pacific, Bethlehem Steel, New Haven, Texas Company, Union Pacific and Westinghouse. Almost everything on the New York list showed gains. Americans had been irregular in London, where Canadian Pacific was especially strong [illegible] their tone had improved. Gold exportations had no influence on stock markets. Traders are of the opinion that the country is well able to stand the movement.

In Boston the weakness of Boston & Maine was again the feature. It touched 35½ and closed at 36, then being 2 below Friday's final. United Fruit made a partial recovery of its early loss, closing a point downward.

RACE PREJUDICE AGAINST LATTER DAY IMMIGRANTS WILL PASS

It Was Excited Once by the Advent of Tuetons and Celts, Who Are Now Rated Model Citizens. Dalmatians Make Their Way

By BOERSIANER.

Race prejudice is as old as man. It probably originated with our noble ancestors of the stone age, who slew one another for no better reason than that the color of other clans' hair was a shade lighter or darker.

The roots of modern prejudices are not more valid. Germans object to the Slavs, who cross the Russian frontier annually to aid in harvesting the German crops. Russians in turn have a libelous proverb about German tradesmen. All the world knows what the Swedes think of the Norwegians—and the Norwegians of the Swedes. Spaniards and Portuguese affect for each other a contempt which they do not really feel. The affection of the Frenchman for the Prussian—and vise versa—is an ennobling spectacle. Northern Italians will not reconcile themselves to the nationalistic assumption that the Sicilians are Italians.

It is not so long ago that an Irish laborer in England was a wrath-provoking sight to an Englishman. What Paddy has always thought of John Bull need not be restated. Americans are not in a position to criticize Bull. In the past generation "No Irish Need Apply" was a familiar legend. The current glorification of early German immigration—"The glorious immigration influx of the '48ers'"—contrasts strangely with the actual reception accorded these immigrants. Some of the periodical files of not later than thirty-[illegible] years ago are instructive.

Harper's Weekly (the Journal of Civilization) then as now was unspeakably scurrilous. It cartooned the Germans infamously—called them "Sacrilegious barbarians," "Desecrators of the Sabbath," "Coarse beer drinkers."

WILSON'S NARROW VIEW.

Contemporary opponents of the "alien invasion" play the past against the present. They laud the Anglo-Saxon and Celtic immigrants of bygone days at the expense of the comers of today. President Wilson in his history set this narrow-minded example. He it was who instituted the invidious comparison, who saw in the Austrians and Italians a "meaner element." Evidently the elements of the stone man have not been entirely eliminated even from the President of the United States.

The fact is that the present day co[illegible] as valuable as were their predecessors. [illegible] are [illegible] supposed to crowd the cities far more than did the Europeans of the north. Who, then, are the miners, the railway builders? The later accessions to the farms of the North and Southwest?

Austria has adopted stringent methods to prevent a depopulation of her agricultural districts. Take as another Austrian instance, the Dalma[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] they are [illegible] seas and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] 15,000 of them worked the gum fields in New Zealand. As soon as gold was discovered in Alaska Dalmatians appeared upon the scene.

They are to be found in the gold fields of Australia and South Africa, at the fisheries of Tacoma, in the coal fields of Michigan, at the oyster beds of Louisiana, they plow the land in Argentine and raise cattle at Puenta Arenas, the southernmost town of the American continent, they own saltpetre mines in Chili; they work the boats of the Rio Plata; they are employed in the shipyards of Brooklyn and Alexandria, and pilot boats at Galatz on the Danube or load them at Odessa. Perhaps 150,000 would be a conservative estimate of their number here. Even in England there is a Dalmatian ship owner, Mr. Brailli of Cardiff, and Mihanivich, the biggest [illegible] p owner in Argentina, is his fellow countryman.

WORKERS AND IDEALISTS, TOO.

They are hard workers and industrious. Even as common laborers or seamen, they like to dress well, have a high standard of cleanliness, and [illegible] addicted to drunkenness or crime are able to put aside an unusually large proportion of their [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] who has sailed along the islands of Brazza, Lissa, Lesina, Curzola, the southern coast of the Peninsula of Sabbioncello and the coast southward to Cattaro [illegible] probably never imagined that the neat white houses and well-kept gardens dotted along the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] were to land and visit some of the villages on Lesina or on Sabbioncello he would find a large proportion of the male population speaking tolerable and often really good English.

This "meaner element"—especially the Dalmatians—has also enriched the art world. The many the world over who have had pleasure in listening to the melodious strains of "Fatinitza," "Boccaccio" and "Galathea" may be unaware that the composer, Von Suppe, was a full-blooded Dalmatian. And there are others in the forerank of literature, painting and music. What Austria in general has done in the higher things of life it is unnecessary to write. Still less necessary is it to allude in that respect to Italy.

New Haven was as strong here as in New York. Most mines showed small gains. Boston Elevated rose 2, ending at 82. The local market was rather narrow, as well as quiet. It's undertone was not so good at the close as was that of the one in New York.

NEW EXPOSURE OF THE CAREER OF SENATOR ALDRICH

[illegible] this country's history [illegible] combined public and private life to his own financial benefit than former Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island. The exposures of his manipulation of the New Haven's purchase of the Rhode Island [illegible] is the culminating [illegible] bare his life in [illegible].

For [illegible] living expenses [illegible] $150,000 a [illegible] senator was [illegible] as applied to [illegible].

Senator Aldrich [illegible] wealthy by [illegible] the power of [illegible] cultivating acquaintance [illegible] put him in [illegible] the pull [illegible] cotton [illegible] tariff [illegible] profits of [illegible] which he was a [illegible] to something over [illegible] a month when the rubber [illegible] was [illegible] manipulated.

[illegible] the [illegible] he [illegible] lead tariff was boosted. He invested in Rhode Island [illegible] and then sold [illegible] to the New Haven for $12,000,000 more than they were worth.

Recently [illegible] estate at Warwick Neck, R. I. The people who paid extra quarter for shoes, or an extra three cents per yard for cotton goods that Aldrich might levy his tariff tribute, should relish the reading of this list of items in that Warwick [illegible] expenditure:

And so on.

This briefly [illegible] the Senator's career [illegible]:

1889-1911 Boss of the United States Senate [illegible] General manager of the United States.

EXPOSED IN 1911

[illegible] 1910 and 1911 [illegible] the exposure came—the exposure which drove him from the Senate. Senator Bristow of Kansas charged openly that Senator Aldrich had manipulated the tariff to fatten his treasury. The Kansan said Aldrich profited from the cotton tariff. Aldrich was silent. The Kansan said Aldrich profited from the rubber tariff. Senator Aldrich, driven to [illegible] in his own defence, said:

"Neither I nor any member of my family has ever had any pecuniary interest [illegible] to whether the rates on rubber manufactures are 30 or 35 or 300 per cent., nor as to whether crude rubber is on the free list or taxed."

And then it was proved:

That the Senator personally owned over $[illegible],000 stock in a Malaysian rubber combination, and that he was a heavy, if not a dominant stockholder in the United States Rubber Company, the rubber manufacturing trust. The tariff increased the profits of the trust over 25 per cent., and increased the imports of crude rubber—in which Aldrich's Malaysian company was interested by tremendous figures.

And last week Charles S. Mellen testified that Aldrich engineered the sale of the Rhode Island trolleys to the New Haven at extortionate prices—a transaction in which over $10,000,00 of New Haven money—widows' and orphans' money—went kiting.

Aldrich was asked "what about Mellen's statement?" His reply was the old familiar phrase:

"I have nothing to say."

Editorial in Boston American Leads to Action by District Attorney Against Mr. Mellen

This is the editorial in Friday's Boston American which led District Attorney Pelletier to act in the case of Mr. Mellen.

The AMERICAN Hopes That District Attorney Pelletier Is Noting Mr. Mellen's Testimony

He May Find That the Revelations Concerning the American Express Company Contract with the Boston & Maine Give Him a Chance to Proceed on a Charge of Criminal Conspiracy

The AMERICAN calls the attention of District Attorney Pelletier to the testimony of Mr. Mellen before the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning the American Express Company contract. If the statute of limitation has not run upon this transaction, it may be that Mr. Pelletier will find that it involved a criminal conspiracy against the stockholders of the Boston & Maine Railroad by Director Richard Olney, Lewis Cass Ledyard, Henry M. Whitney and others, who represented, directly or indirectly, the American Express Company on the board of directors of the Boston & Maine.

For several years the Boston AMERICAN has been calling public attention to the contract which the American Express Company forced upon the Boston & Maine, by which, as the AMERICAN has reiterated over and over again, the poor Boston & Maine was being robbed of more than $700,000 a year.

The story of this evil transaction the AMERICAN has told repeatedly, and Mr. Mellen, in his testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, now confirms, to the last detail, the allegations concerning this transaction which the Boston AMERICAN has so frequently made.

The contract now existing between the Boston & Maine and the American Express Company was entered into just before the American Express Company sold out its great block of Boston & Maine stock to the New Haven Railroad, and was made in anticipation of the incoming control of the New Haven. The old contract had still several years to run. It was a bad contract, but was not so bad at the time it was originally made.

Lewis Cass Ledyard, Richard Olney, Henry M. Whitney and several others represented, directly or indirectly, the American Express Company on the directorate of the Boston & Maine. Mr. Mellen testified as follows:

"I would not have made such a contract, for the New Haven was 35 per cent. of the express receipts of the express business under its contract with the Adams Express Company. I would not have signed a contract which gave the Boston & Maine only 35 per cent. of the express receipts. But I was willing that Mr. Ledyard would relieve me of the responsibility before I took hold of the Boston & Maine. I was glad to dodge it."

Mr. Mellen admits that the Boston & Maine, staggering on the very verge of bankruptcy, has lost $8,000,000 in the last ten years under this contract. The Interstate Commerce Commission has found that on the basis of the contracts between the express companies and the railroads, the Boston & Maine loses $71[illegible],000 a year. This is 2 per cent. upon the capital stock of the Boston & Maine, which now pays no dividends at all.

Richard Olney was a PARTY to this transaction. Mr. Olney has been a PARTY to EVERY ONE of the wretched performances which have brought the Boston & Maine to its present pitiable state, in which those who hold its stock have found their property nearly wiped out, and those who live on its lines have found its service nearly destroyed.

It is not giving us so good service today as it was twenty years ago, in spite of the advancement in the arts and sciences, in spite of the improvement of rails and the enormous increase in the power of engines and all that inventive genius and the progress of the times have given us. Dishonesty and incompetency have robbed the public, the investor, the business man and the passenger of the advantages of advancing civilization as it touches the control of concerns.

This is the SAME RICHARD OLNEY who, while Attorney-General of the United States, dealing with the railroads throughout his incumbency of that office advised President Cleveland to send the United States troops to Chicago to aid the managers of the combined railroads then seeking to crush their employes, and against the protest of the then Governor of Illinois and the Mayor of Chicago.

This is the SAME RICHARD OLNEY who, while Attorney-General of the United States, dealing with the railroads, kept a retainer of ten thousand dollars a year from the Boston & Maine from the time he entered Cleveland's Cabinet as Attorney-General until he left the office.

Yet President Wilson continues to offer him the highest public offices and some of our newspapers affect to feel that these offers are an honor to Massachusetts.

Mr. Olney is a man of advanced years who has held high public places, and the AMERICAN would not call attention to his derelictions if his years and his office did not give him a public credit which he is constantly using against the public interest.

Henry M. Whitney, then on that same board of directors, was the gentleman whom the AMERICAN advised the Democratic party not to nominate for Governor several years ago, and whom the AMERICAN prevented from being nominated the first year of his candidacy. The next year in one of these periodical losses of responsibility and honor which have so seriously shaken public confidence in the Democratic party, he became the Democratic candidate for Governor. The AMERICAN opposed him to the polls, and he received the smallest vote given a Democratic candidate for Governor in thirty years. Under his leadership, the Democratic party fell to the third party in the State, and the candidate of the Independence League, which the AMERICAN supported against Mr. Whitney, received more votes than Mr. Whitney, the Democratic nominee.

Graustein Guests Get $8,600 Verdicts

Four Were Injured in Crash of Autos.

Four automobile guests of William A. Graustein, the Boston milk contractor, who were injured in a collision between his car and one owned by Mildred C. Smith of Northboro, were awarded a total of $8,600 damages against Mildred C. Smith by a Suffolk County jury before Judge Lawton today. The plaintiffs and their respective damages are: Martha R. Lang, $2,500, Edward Lang, her husband, $5,000; Marie L. Remuth, $1,000; Alice C. Remuth, $100.

Similar suits were also brought against James W. Maguire a garage owner, whose employe, Gilson, was driving the Smith car. The jury found that the accident was due partly to the negligence of Gilson, who had been sent with the car at the owner's request.

CANCER, IN EARLY STAGES, NOW CURED BY RADIUM AT THE BOSTON CITY HOSPITAL

Doctors and Women's Clubs Issue Rules in Campaign Against the Deadly Disease.

Cancer [illegible] the early stages, is being [illegible] the Boston City Hospital by [illegible] of radium, according to the [illegible] there.

The [illegible] of the departments of X Ray and radium, under the direction [illegible] Dr. [illegible] of [illegible]

[illegible] pital [illegible] American [illegible]

CANCER TRUTHS.

[illegible]

Cancer is almost invariably at first a local disease.

It is easily cured if promptly recognized and at once removed by competent treatment.

External cancer is to be seen in a wart or mole, a lump or scab.

Pain is rarely felt in external cancer.

Persistent indigestion with loss of weight and change of color is especially suspicious. Consult a doctor.

One woman in eight and one man in fourteen over fifty years of age is attacked by the disease with fatal results.

More than 75 [illegible] die every year in the United States from cancer.

Any painless lump or sore appearing upon your body should be examined by your physician.

By the time the cancer has become painful the best chance for its cure has passed.

ROLL OF WARNING.

[illegible] may say, "Oh, don't be worried about this, come and see me in a month." When that person comes in a month the cancer has extended. Examining that lump, underneath, is another lump, and then the disease is spreading, and [illegible] It is then more or less incurable.

There is always great advantage [illegible] want to fear the beginning of cancer. We can operate on these little lumps and most of [illegible]

[illegible]

Dr. S[illegible]xter said:

[illegible] the digestive system [illegible] The disease should be [illegible] here early. Cancer of [illegible] stomach or intestines is [illegible] from sight. The X-ray [illegible] something for us [illegible] Every part of the [illegible] stones may pave the way for cancer.

[illegible]

DR. CHEEVER'S VIEWS.

Dr. David Cheever of the Peter Brigham Hospital is very sanguine of the use of radium in the early [illegible] of cancer. He says:

[illegible] irritation of the skin is [illegible] sposing cause of cancer. As people grow older they should watch the formation upon the skin and be careful of scales as they appear on the face. These may be cured by the use of radium.

Cancer of the lip, most of which is superficial, lends itself easily to cure through radium. There are [illegible] cases of this kind among men than women, largely because men smoke and use pipes. When women take to smoking more generally cancer of this particular type will be more prevalent among them.

[illegible] old wounds, and wounds, varicose veins, should be [illegible] pigment moles, warts and other formations on the skin must be looked after. They should receive prompt attention. Our best way to fight external cancer is to act at once. [illegible] Start at the beginning is the law. Radium and X-ray [illegible] show more usefulness in curing.

Radium has probably been shown [illegible] instances to exert a definitely curative effect on certain types of cancer, while the disease is still local and in its early stages. Radium definitely relieves suffering when used in the advanced stages of deeper seated cancers. It is believed that there is no proof, as yet, that radium has finally cured any case of advanced and disseminated cancer. This is the reason why prompt action is essential.

DR. DELANO HOPEFUL.

[illegible] Delano of this city is [illegible] that radium is doing [illegible] superficial cancer and will do more in time to come. He is an authority on radium. He says:

Radium has already a past and has been recording history at a rapid rate, especially within the last year. Radium therapy is then a plant of too vigorous a growth to be sniffed at. America ought to raise some plants of its own!

It is true that the pathway of medicine is strewn with those overthrown pillars which once were thought to mark milestones on the highway of progress, but [illegible] stimulus to a finer discernment, not to an insouciance. Radium has to encounter a good deal of the nil admirari attitude—a certain assumed aloofness of the "you can't feaze me" character. [illegible] could this be less justified than in the case of radium.

As to the part performed by surgery, even at its best, we may speak [illegible] of eradication. [illegible] speak of a cure by [illegible] look to some [illegible] the lines of chemo[illegible] shall be productive of [illegible] and this we seem [illegible] to have in radium.

Brown Leaves for Big Bout Here

CHICAGO, May 23.—George "Knockout" Brown, the Greek middleweight, left here late tonight for Boston, where he is scheduled to battle [illegible] of Milwaukee in a twelve round bout on Wednesday evening. Brown has been training at Nat Lewis's [illegible] and he says that he is in perfect condition and confident that he will win from Moha. Brown has been promised a tussle with [illegible] the Californian middleweight, if he wins from Moha.

4,000 Instructed in Civil Service

Almost 4,000 [illegible] received free instruction [illegible] gymnastics, physical [illegible] and kindred subjects [illegible] ward rooms during the [illegible] week, while the bathing [illegible] and pool games in the [illegible] stations totaled 27,396 for the same period.

Get Ready for the Bugs

During the warm weather bugs of all descriptions are more active. Out of doors the various plant feeding species [illegible] their depredations [illegible] doors the bedbugs, cockroaches, moths and buffalo bugs make themselves doubly obnoxious.

Nights, which should be spent in peaceful slumber are often broken up in tiring pursuit of the wily bedbug.

[illegible] which have been packed away for the [illegible] are chewed up by troublesome [illegible]

[illegible] brought from the pantry, is [illegible] by the presence of a [illegible] his mischievous career by drowning himself in a bowl of some choice [illegible]

Expensive carpets and rugs are found to have been the prey of buffalo bugs, and so it goes [illegible] pests, [illegible] something to make the life of suffering, sweltering humanity even more wretched than it is.

And then comes the insidious microbe of disease spread by the filthy feeding habits of the cockroach, watering and [illegible]. It is this enemy that the public must guard most against. [illegible] other thing fades into insignificance beside it.

The harboring of disease-breeding pests may [illegible] your homes and bring sickness and [illegible] "Forewarned is to be forearmed."

Martin's Insect Exterminators will destroy the different household pests and insure the user freedom from their presence.

Capt. Swazey, Salem Harbor Master, Dead

Led to Capture of $500,000 Confederate Gold in Civil War.

Captain William M. Swazey, harbor master at Salem and veteran of the Civil and Spanish-American wars, died yesterday of heart failure at his home, No. 45 Leach street, Salem. Captain Swazey was commodore of the Essex Naval Veterans. He was born in Marblehead on October 5, 1834.

During the Civil War Captain Swazey, through information from a wounded Confederate soldier, learned that the Confederate blockade runner "Greyhound" was to sail for England with $500,000 in gold. Captain Swazey, then an ensign on board the U. S. S. Connecticut, told the captain, John S. Almy, who captured the "Greyhound" but not before young Swazey had been offered $50,000 if he would assist the vessel to escape. This offer Swazey spurned.

Captain Swazey was twice married, and leaves two sons, the eldest, Dr. William F. Swazey of Salem. He is survived by four sisters.

Think Runaway Wife Sent Little Son Home

The police believe the five-year-old Polish boy who, after having been put aboard a train at the South Station with his mother and infant brother, suddenly appeared at his home, No. 8 Barton street, West End, with two teeth missing and abrasions on his face, was sent back to his father in order that his mother might run away with the baby.

The husband bade the wife and children good bye, thinking they were going back to Poland for a visit. They were to sail from New York on Friday.

MME. FRANCIS FIGHTS FOR NAME ON 'BEAUTIFIER'

Even Turn to Poetry in Effort to Stay in Business of Making Toilet Articles.

While waiting, as she says, to learn whether she can use her own name or not, Mrs. Matilda V. Francis of Somerville, the originator of the "Madame Francis" beautifiers, is consoling herself by expressing her troubles in verse.

One set of verses she has written is called "Deserted." The opening stanza runs thus:

Forsaken, deserted, abandoned by [illegible]
She was left to her troubles, to stand [illegible]
A broken down form, on the verge of [illegible]
None to lend her a [illegible]

Madame Francis complains bitterly of the legal proceedings now under consideration. She said yesterday at her home in Somerville:

"My money and business are [illegible] and now they are trying to take my name from me. If they succeed I shall have to appeal to the State for support, for I am unable to work on account of an incurable disease. For the rest of [illegible] woman suffragist [illegible]

Among the interesting points of testimony was Mme. Francis' statement: "I got some of my formulas from the Boston AMERICAN—in the beauty columns, and they had it right. My husband and I worked them out together."

Judge Jenny of the Superior Court now has the case under advisement.

Mme. Francis says:

"For fourteen years I have been engaged in making toilet goods. I started in business with $2 and first peddled from door to door.

"When the business grew so I [illegible] it alone I had my [illegible] from Syracuse to [illegible] stores [illegible] selling our goods [illegible] I was so exhausted I [illegible] day and have to [illegible] fitting room. Not[illegible] I made from [illegible] to $50 a day."

MRS. WOODWORTH, WHO TOOK MOTHER'S SIDE IN COURT CASE

Mrs. Woodworth testified against her husband when he sued her mother on charges of alienating his wife's affections.

Practical Farming Plans for Women

The Woman's Homestead Association of Boston will soon have in its possession and under its control several "Women communities" in New England, where the scheme of carrying on practical farming for women will be tested. Fruit as well as berry culture will be encouraged.

AWAIT VERDICT IN SUIT AGAINST MOTHER-IN-LAW

A. S. Woodworth, Asking $25,000 Damages for Alienation, Found Wife Hostile Witness.

The final chapter in the sensational trial of A. Stanley Woodworth's $25,000 alienation suit against his mother-in-law, Mrs. Addie G. Fuller, a former president of the once flourishing Nahant "400" Club, will be written in the Salem Superior Court tomorrow. The jury which heard the evidence is expected to report a verdict to Judge Hardy when court convenes at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The case has attracted wide attention and the courtroom was always filled, the spectators being chiefly prominent Nahant women who belonged to the now defunct "400" Club. On the stand details came out of the Woodworth domestic troubles and husband and wife stood on opposite sides, Woodworth testifying for himself, and Mrs. Woodworth, who was Marguerite Fuller, testifying for her mother.

Mrs. Woodworth, who at the age of seventeen married Woodworth, when he was twenty, declared that her affection for her husband was destroyed, not through anything her mother did, but rather through his alleged actions.

Woodworth told of a talk he had with his wife and her parents. He said he had a revolver with him and that he had threatened to "make way with himself." He said he had been prevented.

"In 1909 I noticed a change in my wife's attitude toward me," he said. "I heard her tell her father that she did not care for me as formerly. She became indifferent to me and I became ill, losing twenty-five pounds in weight."

The wife testified that she believed that on the occasion of his having the revolver it was his intention to harm her and not himself.

Many relatives, neighbors and other friends testified in the case. Woodworth was for several years assistant in the Bass Point House, owned by Mrs. Fuller's husband, and was later manager of the Hotel Brenton at Nahant.

The Woodworths were married in 1898. In March, 1910, Mrs. Woodworth filed a suit for divorce, alleging cruel and abusive treatment. Woodworth shortly filed a cross libel.

Twentieth Century Club Hears Jokes

"What will keep milk from souring?" asked J. L. Harbor, humorist, of the Twentieth Century Club members at yesterday afternoon's closing meeting of the year. No one could answer. My Tired Feet Ached for "Tiz"

Let your sore, swollen, sweaty feet spread out in a bath of "TIZ."

"Just couldn't wait to take my hat off!"

Just take your shoes off and then put those weary, shoe-crinkled, aching, burning, corn-pestered, bunion-tortured feet of yours in a "TIZ" bath. Your toes will wriggle with joy; they'll look up at you and almost talk and then they'll take another dive in that "TIZ" bath.

When your feet feel like lumps of lead—all tired out—just try "TIZ." It's grand—it's glorious. Your feet will dance with joy; also you will find all pain gone from corns, callouses and bunions.

There's nothing like "TIZ." It's the only remedy that draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up your feet and cause foot torture.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" at any drug or department store—don't wait. Ah! how glad your feet get; how comfortable your shoes feel. You can wear shoes a size smaller if you desire.

Many Operations Avoided

WHILE of course there are serious cases of feminine ills that nothing but a surgical operation will remedy, the indisputable fact remains that hundreds of operations have been avoided by the wonderful medicinal virtue of

and the very best proof of this is the unsolicited and grateful letters of the recovered ones themselves. By special permission we publish here four of them out of hundreds we have:—

Logansport, Ind.—"My baby was over a year old and I bloated till I was a burden to myself. I suffered from female trouble so I could not stand on my feet and I felt like millions of needles were pricking me all over. At last my doctor told me that all that would save me was an operation, but this I refused. I told my husband to get me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I would try it before I would submit to any operation. He did so and I improved right along. I am now doing all my work and feeling fine. I hope other suffering women will try your Compound. I will recommend it to all I know."—Mrs. Daniel D. B. Davis, 110 Franklin Street, Logansport, Ind.

Decatur, Ill.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. Laura A. Griswold, 2300 Blk. East William Street, Decatur, Ill.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"My left side pained me so for several years that I expected to have to undergo an operation, but the first bottle I took of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of the pains in my side and I continued its use until I became regular and free from pains. I had asked several doctors if there was anything I could take to help me and they said there was nothing that they knew of. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. Griffith, 7305 Madison Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine.

Charlotte, N.C.—"I was in bad health for two years, with pains in both sides and was very nervous. I had a growth which the doctor said was a tumor, and I never would get well unless I had an operation. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I gladly say that I am now enjoying fine health."—Mrs. Rosa Sims, 16 Winona St., Charlotte, N.C.

It would seem wise before undergoing an operation to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

RELIABLE TESTIMONY.—All our testimonials are guaranteed to be genuine and truthful. They came to us entirely unsolicited and are sincere expressions of gratitude for actual benefits received from the medicine.—THE LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO., LYNN, MASS.

RED SOX DEFEAT CALLAHAN MEN, 6-2

Carrigan's Men Beat the White Sox in a Lively Battle at Fenway Park Before 15,000 Fans, Capturing the Series

"Dutch" Leonard Pitches Another Winner and Also Bats in 2 Runs with a Lusty Double in the Second Inning

The Red and White Sox met in the third and final game of their present series at Fenway Park, yesterday, and the home team carried off the victory. The score was 6 to 2. "Rebel" Russell, who saved the game for the visitors on Thursday when Joe Benz appeared to be weakening, started yesterday, but lasted only four innings.

The Red Sox did not hit him so very hard but their safe swats were most opportune and they scored three runs while he occupied the mound. Jasper, who succeeded him, got along very well, but retired in the seventh for a pinch hitter who failed to pinch hit.

Jim Scott then tried his luck, but passed three men in one inning and allowed a single, all good for two runs. Then Mr Faber took up the job. He stopped further scoring in the seventh, but the eighth a single by Speaker, a sacrifice, a pass to Gardner and an infield single by Janvrin filled the bases, with one man out. Carrigan was called out on strikes, but Faber couldn't get them over for Leonard, the result being that a run was forced in.

"FANS" HONOR DALY.

Chicago's first run came in the fourth when with one man gone, Collins singled. He stole second after Daly fanned and scored when Janvrin allowed Alcock's grounder to get away from him. In the eighth, singles by Bodie and Chase followed by an out at first produced the visitor's final tally.

Manager Callahan, as in the previous games here, made all kinds of shifts, sending in three pinch hitters and using four pitchers, but with Leonard pitching his usual high

BRAVES BEATEN BY CHICAGO IN FAST GAME, 2-1

Walter Maranville blew his third error in the ninth inning today and paved the way for a Chicago victory. It was the first Cub win of the series and they were victorious by the count of 2 to 1.

It was a pitcher's battle all the way through, between Rudolph and Lavender and the Bostonian would have won easily had not his pals kicked Miss Opportunity in the face on the two occasions that she attempted to hand them the game.

Miss Opportunity became exceedingly angry, turned her affection to the Cubs and they embraced her upon the first occasion. It came in the ninth when Zimmerman hit to Maranville. The shortstop kicked the sphere and Heine kicked the bag.

Schulte's sacrifice sent him to second. Then Bill Sweeney, old Brave, had the exquisite pleasure of driving in the run that spelled defeat for his old bean-eating pals. It was a line [illegible] to centre.

In the matter of pitching, it was a [illegible] as both teams secured six [illegible] [illegible] only alone, was able to get more than one safe blow, for the Braves, and he was present with a double and a single in addition to a walk.

Neither the crowd nor the weather was anything to brag about here today. A light rain was falling when the game started and it continued to sprinkle at intervals. The crowd, however, was strictly a rainy day one. There may have been 3,000 fans out as Secretary Nickerson was quite certain that he would require no as-

DARTMOUTH WINS BIG COLLEGE MEET

Some of the victors in big college track meet. Reading from left to right Charlie Rice of Maine winning the 220-ard dash from Frank O'Hara of Tech in the record time of 22 seconds; Larry Whitney of Dartmouth making his winning shot-put; Bailey of Maine, who broke meet record in hammer throw; O'Connor of Dartmouth winning the quarter; Bartlett of Brown throwing the discus for a victory; Cook of Tech finishing first in two-mile race.

MAINE SECOND, TECH THIRD, IN GREAT BATTLE

By NICK FLATLEY.

A great Dartmouth track team showed true to form and won a glorious victory in splendid meet at the Stadium yesterday. Consequently, for the third successive year the New England track title goes back to Hanover, New Hampshire.

Just as last year, the Green fliers, jumpers and weight tossers proved that no small New England college could even hold them close. Dartmouth rolled up 57½ points, while Maine, victor in an afternoon-long contest with Tech for the place, registered but 28. The Boston outfit scored 26 5-6, with the remainder scattered here, there and everywhere.

Splendid weather, a good crowd and fast track greeted the several hundred athletes that fought for glory, but a sharp wind that swept in sudden squalls in all directions around the track killed the hopes of new records.

RICE HERO OF MEET.

This unfortunate feature, however, only served to emphasize the wonderful sprinting of Charlie Rice, the one-time Powder Point wonder, who scampered away with both dashes and equalled both records, though he had no competition that forced him to extend himself and though he ran right into the teeth of the twenty-knot breeze, as the yachting experts would put it.

One record did go down in the course of the festivities, the exceedingly athletic Mr. Bailey of Maine tossing the sixteen-pound hammer a small matter of 164 feet 8¾ inches, some three feet better than the mark he established in the tryouts Friday.

From start to finish the meet was a Dartmouth victory—there was never any doubt of it—but none the less there were plenty of stout-

The new rules bar any one from standing in certain spots for the purpose of accepting oral wagers, the displaying of odds and soliciting of bets, and also bar the [illegible] of wagers in one's pockets.

CORNELL EIGHT WINS BIG RACE

Defeats Princeton and Yale by Great Finish on Lake Cayuga Course.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 23.—Although Princeton gave a fine exhibition and kept close to the leaders of the first triangular crew race ever held on Cayuga Lake today, Cornell came through easily at the finish and won by a boat length. Yale was a poor third by five lengths after dogging Princeton, a length back, until the mile and three-quarter mark was reached. There Low, at No. 3, caught a crab and stopped the boat.

Owing to the high winds the race was not started until 7:15, an hour and a quarter late, but it proved the prettiest race ever seen on the local course.

Cornell got the jump at the start and rowing a stroke of 32 nearly all the way, kept on even terms with Princeton to the mile and a half mark where the Tigers led by a half length.

Cornell and Princeton were about even at the mile and three-quarter point, where Yale got into trouble. Here Princeton began a nerve-racking sprint, but Stroke Sprancy in the Cornell shel raised the stroke for the first ime to about 36 and flashed across the line with a mighty burst of speed that left Princeton a length in the rear at the stake boat.

The Cornell freshmen came through in the second race of th evening with a great finish and opened up four lengths of water over the Princeton first-year boat.

The official time in the varsity race was: Cornell, 10 38 3-5; Princeton, 10 41 3-5, Yale 10 58 4-5.

The freshman time was: Cornell, 10 51 2-5, Princeton 11 07 1-5.

sistance in carting away the Boston share of the receipts.

It was Lavender against Rudolph at the start, and the Braves started as if they would make it decidedly unpleasant for the Chicago twirler. With two gone, Connolly slammed one along the left foul line and did not even hesitate until he was on second. But Gilbert couldn't drive him across, and that chance was lost. The Cubs also threatened in the same portion. With two disposed of, Maranville not only fumbled, but booted Saier's bounder, and Vic reached first.

SCHULTE STARTED SCORING.

He immediately pilfered second, but expired there, as Zim could not produce the [illegible] getting blow. It was [illegible] for the Braves in the [illegible] Cubs then put over a [illegible] Schulte, who was in the game [illegible] for the first time in [illegible] opened with a three-base [illegible] to right.

[illegible] Sweeney was right there with [illegible] and "Wildfire" came across. Corriden took a crack in [illegible] and it looked as if Rudolph was gone. He descended in a hurry, however, and made Bresnahan fly to [illegible] and then fanned both Lavender and Leach. This was sure getting out of the hole.

The third produced no prospects and the fourth likewise was barren.

The Braves had an excellent opportunity in the fifth, but a double play ruined it. Schmidt opened with a single to right, but was doubled off first when Good made a sensational running catch of Martin's foul and followed with a perfect peg to Saier. Gowdy followed with a single to centre, but Mann rolled out, and the Braves did not get a man to second, despite their two hits.

TIED GAME IN SEVENTH.

The Cubs couldn't do anything to Rudolph in their half and the sixth saw both sides go down in order. This indicated the pitching was pretty good. It was:

The Braves tied it up in the seventh, and with just a bit of hitting would have scored several runs. Connolly walked, and Gilbert bunted, but Zimmerman threw the ball away and Connolly went to third, while the batter pulled up at second.

Schmidt was handed a pass, which filled the bases and since no one was out, large doings were on the bill. Otto Hess hit in place of Martin, and did what the pinch hitters usually do—fanned.

Gowdy was present with the necessary long fly and Connolly dashed across with the run which made it one-all. But there was some bad base running, and Schmidt was trapped between first and second.

They went into the eighth with the score a tie, as the Cubs could do nothing in their half of the seventh.

It looked as if the Braves would transact a little business when Mann opened the eighth with a single, but his pals couldn't drive him the rest of the way.

BRAVES LOST GREAT CHANCE.

The Braves certainly had a golden opportunity in the ninth, but they positively declined to accept the game. Connolly opened with a single and Gilbert bunted to Saier. So eager was Vic to start a double play, that he threw the ball before he had it.

The usual result, he didn't get it, and both men were safe.

Schmidt tried to sacrifice and bunted all right. The trouble was that he got in front of batted ball and was called out. Deal then hit to Corriden, who fumbled and the bases were filled. It looked easy, but Gowdy forced Connolly at the plate and Mann was then thrown out by Lavender.

The Cubs declined to go into extra innings and scored the winning run in their half. Zim hit at Maranville, who fumbled long enough to lose his man. Schulte sacrificed and Sweeney produced the safe blow that meant a Chicago victory.

Senators Beat the Browns, 6-1

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23.—Washington had little trouble defeating the Browns, 6 to 1, here this afternoon in the final game of the series. Mitchell of the visitors was knocked out of the box in the fourth, Manning relieving him.

Jim Shaw, Washington's big right hander, was backed by fine support and was never in serious trouble. Nine safe swats in four innings off Mitchell produced only three Washington runs, but he had nothing in his repertoire with which to fool the Senators and Manning, who relieved him, was hit hard in the sixth, a trio of Senatorial runs coming over.

Woonsocket Defeats New Bedford, 3 to 0

NEW BEDFORD, May 23.—Inability to hit Craft caused New Bedford to lose to Woonsocket in the Colonial League today, 3 to 0. A high wind caused Besse to misjudge three long fly balls in right field and allowed Woonsocket to score two runs in the first. The Whalers rallied in the seventh but a fast double play averted a score. Bowman was wild and was hit hard. The fielding of Werre featured. The score:

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 23.—The planters have heretofore had a hard proposition to win from Pittsfield's team, but this afternoon's game was decidedly one sided in the local nine's favor. TIGERS A REAL PENNANT CONTENDER TILL SEASON CLOSES, COBB DECLARES Written for the Boston Sunday American.

By TY COBB.

By this time I suppose that the most biased of baseball critics has tired of calling the Tigers a false alarm and is willing to concede that we are going to be a real factor in the 1914 pennant race.

If there is anybody left who still thinks that we have nothing but a little "Spring" speed it is high time that he climbed on the bandwagon and began to think of reserving some world's series tickets for Navin Field next Fall.

I am not exactly claiming that the race is all over, but I do want to go on record as saying that the club which beats us will be grappling with the National League's representatives in October.

PREDICTS SPURT WHEN SLUMP ENDS

We have been winning by playing all-around good baseball, and that is what we expect to keep doing.

The fans should remember that a lot of our early games were grabbed when some of the best batters on the club—I mean the men who have had the best averages in the past—were not hitting much. I had a hard time getting going myself, while Crawford after a splendid start, ran into a bunch of tough luck, and for a week hardly got one safe. Then Bush got mixed up with the jinx, and in eleven games only made one hit.

Just wait until we all get our eyes on the ball together, and they will never get us out. Our pitching has been remarkable, carrying us to victory many times when we were unable to do much with the opposing slabman. Dubuc, Dauss, Main and Coveleskie are in great shape, and they will give any batters in the league trouble.

Mackmen Always Will Be Hard to Hold Back.

I am not overlooking the fact that we will have to fight hard to keep in front of the Mackmen. That club got away to a bad start, and the injury to Barry was a blow, but in spite of all the handicaps, the champions have clung on our heels, and we look for a battle with them all through the season.

It is hard to dope out their pitching staff, for one day some hurler will get knocked out of the box, only to come back and pitch shut-out ball against the same club. Bush did this in the series with the Naps, getting hammered to a pulp the first time he started, and later going to the relief of Shawkey, and not allowing a single man to reach first base in five innings.

Plank's good showing against Cleveland in the thirteen-inning game he won was sad news to the clubs which are fighting the Macks. But I personally have given up waiting for Plank and Matty to "blow." I wouldn't be surprised to see these birds pitching when I have grandchildren old enough to play in the major leagues.

With Giants in Form, National Is Real Race.

The National League appears to have a regular race this year instead of a procession, as was feared when the Pirates went so far out in front at the start of the season. New York was the first club to give the Clarke outfit a check, taking the first series played by an Eastern club in the Smoky City this season.

It was a good thing that this series resulted as it did, for it put new hope in the hearts of the Giants' adherents and convinced the public at large that McGraw would be up there fighting for the flag again.

All the ball players were sure that the Giants would get going. With a manager like McGraw at the helm and a pitcher of Mathewson's calibre, any club is dangerous. The Little Napoleon could take a bunch of spavined veterans and make them win games, I believe. He is a wonder at getting work out of players, often making mediocre performers go beyond their real speed for long stretches.

I am inclined to think that there is going to be a two-club fight in the National League, just like there is in the American. New York and Pittsburgh must be handed the palm as the real class in the circuit, and it looks like a cinch that they will finish one, two. Which will be one and which the runner up, I do not dare attempt to predict at this time. There is a lot of baseball to play before October and many things might happen.

Red Sox Beat White Sox and Tie for Fourth Place

Cambridge Fans Celebrate Daly Day at Fenway

Tom Daly "Shaking" with ex-Mayor Barry, Mayor Good Between Them; and Harry Lord on the Red Sox Bench

grade of baseball, the visitors never had a chance. The fielding features were contributed by Scott and Gardner. Schalk's throwing to bases was excellent.

The Clevelands come Monday for a series of four games.

It was "Daly Day" and a large delegation of friends of the Chicago substitute catcher journeyed to Fenway Park in order to witness the contest and to pay honor to their fellow townsman. The Cambridge rooters were led by Mayor Good and were accompanied by the St. Joseph's fife and drum corps and occupied a section in the left wing of the grandstand.

When Daly stepped to the plate in the second inning, he was presented with a piece of jewelry by Mayor Good in behalf of the baseball lovers of the University City.

BALL HITS DALY'S SISTER.

Daly's sister occupied a seat in the grandstand with the Cambridge delegation and she was struck by the foul ball in the first inning of the game. She tried to dodge the ball but was unable to do so and received a slight bruise.

The Red Sox victory yesterday makes them tie with the Yankees for fourth place in the American League pennant race, and if their pitchers continue to do as well as they and the batters begin to hit the ball, Carrigan's clan should soon be fighting it out with the league leaders.

Yesterday's win was due in no small measure to the fine work of "Dutch" Leonard. The young Californian was in rare form and was complete master of the situation throughout the nine sessions. He held the visitors to six scattered hits and was particularly effective when there were men on the bases.

Harry Lord, who quit the White Sox when the team was in Washington, declaring that he was disgusted with his own work and intended to retire from baseball, viewed the game from the Red Sox bench. He swapped stories with his former teammates on the Boston team and took a deep interest in the progress of the game.

Manager Callahan of the White Sox stated that he still considers Lord a fine ball player and that he would welcome his return to the White Sox ranks. Harry, however, seems to be firm in his intention to remain out of baseball for the time being at least.

The Red Sox started the scoring in the second stanza. Speaker bunted safely just out of the reach of Russell. Scott attempted to sacrifice, but instead popped to Alcock. Gardner hit to deep short for a single. Weaver did not have a chance to get Larry at first but threw the ball wild to Chase and Speaker raced to third. Gardner [illegible] stole second.

LEONARD KNOCKS IN TWO.

Janvrin was unable to do anything with Russell's benders and struck out. The Chicago hurler had considerable respect for Carrigan's ability as a batter and, after giving Uncle Bill the once over, he presented him with free transportation to first.

He thought Leonard would be an easy victim, but he was sadly mistaken. "Dutch" has always told his teammates that he is a natural-born slugger, but few of them have believed him. He surprised them, therefore, when he smashed a double to left which enabled Speaker and Gardner to score. Hooper ended the inning by going out, Alcock to Chase.

The White Sox made their first tally in the fourth frame. With one down, Collins belted a single to centre. Daly was unable to do anything with Leonard's offerings and fanned. Alcock then hit a hard one to Janvrin and the Roxbury boy made a miscue and Collins went to third while Alcock was safe at first.

Collins and Alcock then successfully worked the double steal, Collins scoring.

Carrigan's gang came right back and scored a run in their half of the third inning. Scott started the fireworks with a screaming double between left and centre and advanced to third on a passed ball. The little shortstop scored easily when Gardner hoisted a long sacrifice fly to Demmitt.

The Red Sox' run-making machine got busy again in the seventh chapter. Scott was then pitching for Chicago, having replaced Jasper, who had taken Russell's place in the box when the latter was removed in order to give way to a pinch hitter.

TWO MORE FOR SOX.

With one out, Janvrin and Carrigan were passed. Leonard went out, Berger to Chase, and both runners advanced, and counted a minute later on Hooper's single. Yerkes was also passed and after Scott had two balls on Lewis he was taken out of the box and replaced by a youth by the name of Faber who managed to strike out Duffy.

The visitors made their last rally in the eighth round. Bodie got an infield single and went to second on a passed ball. Weaver struck out, but Chase singled sending Bodie to third. Bodie counted while Collins was being thrown out at first by Yerkes. Daly singled sending Chase to third but both runners were left stranded when Alcock fouled to Janvrin.

The Red Sox run was forced in by Faber as was described above.

B. C. NINE WINS FROM WAKEFIELD

Score Five Runs in First Inning, but Barely Take Game by 6-5.

Boston College practically cinched its game with Wakefield yesterday afternoon at Wakefield, in the first inning, putting five tallies over the pan on four hits and two men getting hit by pitched balls. The final score was 6 to 5 in favor of Boston College.

Through poor support given Scannell of Boston College, Wakefield gradually crept up until it tied the score in the eighth, but the visitors got a [illegible] in the ninth through Rogers' wildness in hitting batters, and he scored the winning run on a single.

Reardon's stick work and Wilcox's clever fielding at third were features for Boston College, while Chelssong, Horrigan and Bennett put up a fine game in the infield for Wakefield.

RINDGE HAMMERS SOMERVILLE, 11-4

Police Called In to Prevent Row When Umpire and Players Argue.

Rindge Technical School handed Somerville High School a fine young trouncing yesterday afternoon on Russell Field, North Cambridge, the score being 11 to 4. This was sweet revenge for Rindge, as a few weeks ago the Somerville boys took them into camp to the tune of 4 to 2.

The game was a combination of baseball and war in Mexico. In the seventh inning things pointed to a general roughhouse. Umpire Loughlin, whose decisions somewhat peeved the Somerville ball tossers became involved in a series of disputes in the inning. Quick work on the part of officers from Station No. 4, North Cambridge prevented things from coming to a head, the police driving the crowd off the field when they started to take a hand. The score:

After being twice defeated by Medford High in the Suburban League [illegible], Malden High turned the tables on their old rivals yesterday at the Malden athletic field and won, 13 to 3.

[illegible] Flanders did the mound work for Malden, opposing Sweeney and Ballou, who were pounded for fourteen singles.

The last half of the third netted six runs for Malden, opening with a [illegible] by Flanders.

With one out in the seventh and the bases full, Laird was caught asleep off third bag. Burrell was given free transportation, again filling the bases, but the side was retired when Doyle was sent to the bench by the breeze route.

I. A. A. A. Plans Big Outdoor Track Meet

Plans for furnishing a big outdoor athletic meet in midsummer are now being considered by the members of the Irish-American A. A. of this city. The meet will be held at Locust street Saturday, July 28. Boston has been without a big outdoor meet in midsummer since the St. Augustine Church of South Boston abandoned its games, with the single exception of the Olympic carnival provided by the Boston Lodge of Elks two years ago.

London Men Accept Ritchie's Big Terms

CHICAGO, May 2.—The syndicate of London sporting men who have been bidding for the Willie Ritchie-Freddie Welsh match have accepted the terms of the champion through their representative, Bob Vernon. Willie at first demanded $50,000 of the London people. Later he offered to make the trip for $35,000 with a privilege of 50 per cent. over a $30,000 guarantee, this to cover all privileges. This was accepted.

Johnson's Battery Mate Out for Month

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Eddie Ainsmith, the Senators' crack backstop battery partner of Walter Johnson will be out of the game for at least four weeks. In batting practice he sustained a fracture of the left arm just above the wrist.

The backstop complained of pain in the injured member and was excused by Manager Griffith. Eddie visited the Georgetown Hospital where an X-ray examination disclosed a fracture. According to the physicians, Ainsmith will not be able to play for at least four weeks and it may be longer before he gets into the battle line.

Carnegie, Gunboat Smith Sail Together

NEW YORK, May 23.—Andrew Carnegie, apostle of peace, and Gunboat Smith, apostle of warfare in the prize ring, were fellow passengers on the Imperator, which sailed today for Europe.

While Carnegie was telling one batch of reporters that "You may make it emphatic there will be no war in Mexico," Smith issued all sorts of challenges through the reporters to Jack Johnson, Frank Moran, Battling Levinsky and other swatters. Carnegie's wife and daughter were with him. They will go to Skibo Castle, Scotland, for the Summer.

Harry Vardon Tells What Is the Matter With Golf Players of America

DECLARES THEY FAIL BECAUSE THEIR COURSES ARE TOO EASY

Greatest of All the Professionals Says Yankees Have Made No Improvement in the Game in the Last Fourteen Years

They Pull Their Shots, Which Is a Vital Defect; Says 'Chick' Evans Is a Better Player Than Either Ouimet or Travers

English Had the Same Troubles Until They Made Their Courses More Difficult; Famous Player Describes Details

(The following article by the greatest golfer in the world is of particular interest just now as an English expert's explanation of "What is the matter with American golf?" It was written for the current number of Everybody's Magazine before the British amateur championship tourney this week, and may be regarded, therefore, a prophetic explanation of the early elimination of the celebrated American golfers in that tourney).

HARRY VARDON

By HARRY VARDON.

I visited America and made a tour of your golf-courses fourteen years ago. Last Summer I returned, and what impressed me most was that during those fourteen years American golf has improved but little.

This is not the fault of your golfers. They have not had the chance. It is the fault of those who are responsible for your courses. You have some good players over here, but they are not trained to play the right way.

Years ago we faced this same situation in England. Some of us came to realize that if our courses were not made more difficult the skill of our great mass of golfers would not be developed. A general movement was begun to provide severe courses. Then our courses were changed into real links, and the fellows who had threatened to quit were very glad to stay.

American Golfer "Pulls" His Shots, Strives Too Much for Distance.

The greatest fault of the American golfer is that he plays too much for a "pull." That is, he strives for great distance, lining out a ball that shoots toward the right, then hooks round to the left.

He does this because there's nothing to stop him from doing it. When he drives he faces a clear, unobstructed plain. His courses are not bunkered enough. They're too easy.

You have in America about eighteen men who can play really high-class golf. But they've all developed this "pull" game. If they played on one of our good English courses they'd be in trouble all the time.

Consider your best golfers who have gone to England. They've all been beaten. The courses have beaten them.

Best British Players Can Beat Americans.

It is not in boastfulness, because I am an Englishman, that I say that the 200 best players of England could beat the 200 best players of America.

I hasten to modify that claim. If such a match were played on your courses, there's no telling how it would come out. You can play any sort of a game over here and make a go of it.

It is now clear [illegible] that golf is no longer the game of the few in America. Because of your public links everybody can play it today. That is good.

Nowadays you have just as many young boys playing golf as we have in England. Thirteen years ago [illegible] scarcely any.

It has been c[illegible] to my attention that [illegible] men, because of their youth and suppleness, are invariably better players than those of middle age. That is all nonsense. The middle-aged man plays just as good a game as the young fellow. Often, in fact, better, because he is more patient and studies the game more.

But it impressed me that you Americans make a labor of golf. You overdo it. I saw hundreds of you go out and play forty-five holes in a day. An Englishman would never think of doing that. He'd know that to play more than thirty-six a day—and that rarely—is to ruin the benefits golf gives you.

Americans Will Not Practice Enough.

My advice to the American who wants to get the most good out of golf, is to practice more than he plays. You never learn anything by constant playing. Constant practice, though, will make anyone a good player. Really, it's surprising how little it takes to make a great player. But you Americans will not give up your time to practice.

Study your clubs. Get acquainted with them, master them.

I've noticed that a number of Americans scorn golf form. Without form you can never play more than an ordinary sort of game.

I must say, though, that you Americans are the best putters in the world.

Englishmen are the worst; even Frenchmen are better. Everybody putts well on this side. My advice to anybody whose putting is poor is this. Imagine the hole a foot farther on than it is. Then hit your ball with sufficient force just to reach that imaginary line.

For approaching, Americans should use the niblick more. Over here too many of you play the "run-up" shot, which is not good golf.

You should make an approach that sails high in the air and then drops to the green, thudding into the turf, moving just a few inches when it alights. To make an approach that sends the ball bouncing across the green is bad golf, because it may get you into trouble.

Thinks Evans Is Our Best American.

I think I am going to surprise you now by saying that I do not consider Ouimet the best golfer you have. He is, of course, very good, and I admire him for his ox heart.

Ouimet plays in better style than Travers, but neither one of them is up to "Chick" Evans.

Evans I rate the best amateur golfer in America because he understands every shot. He plays every club well. He is easily the best of your amateurs. Ouimet is very good, if he can keep it up, but give me Evans.

Your best professional is McDermott. He improved himself greatly by coming over to England. Our courses made him change his style of play.

Travers impressed me as being a little weak in controlling his ball from the tee. A golfer who pulls everything and cannot use a wooden golf club off the tee is not a golfer.

The man at the top of the list ought to be able to use every club in his bag, not to have to favor one. I saw Travers play only eight shots, and eight were wrong.

We ran across some amateurs who can play the game properly, but they are very scarce. You'd have a lot more good ones if they were only taught properly.

But what impressed me most with American golf is that your courses are inadequate. You can blame them for everything.

Before we went out on our tour [illegible] told us that Myopia, at Hamilton, Mass., and the National on Long Island, are the two best courses in this country. I played at Myopia, but I don't consider it your best.

Improve the Courses and You'll Improve Golf.

Your best course is at Detroit, your next at Mayfield, Cleveland. I would rate the new Toronto course third, Myopia fourth.

The Brookline course is not a real championship course. It is like the others. It needs more bunkers. It has some good features, but some that are not so good.

It would seem that good judgment is not used in trapping your courses. Where you have a hundred bunkers on a course, we have a hundred on one hole.

You don't penalize enough. You ought to have bunkers on every hole guarding every green.

My advice to the American golfer is to insist that the greens committee of his club make his course more difficult.

YANKEE GOLF STARS OFF TO FRENCH LINKS

"Chick" Evans Tells How Jenkins Won Big Title Match; French Title Play Tuesday.

MANY STARS TO COMPETE

By CHARLES W. (CHICK) EVANS.

Former Western Champion.

SANDWICH, Eng., May 23.—The great British amateur golf championship of 1914 has ended and Scotland has furnished the new champion. It is a big feather in Scotland's cap and James Braid travelled all night to see to "Wee Jenkins" win.

The weather, which had been warm and sunny all day, was lowering when the final started. Rain fell at intervals, but despite this there was a large crowd on the links, and the playing was good for the last stages of the tournament, the score being 75 and 77.

I think the play, though good in the morning, was much improved in the afternoon match, which ended at the sixteenth green.

The conditions under which this match was played differed greatly from anything in the previous contests, for the rain over night had made the course heavy and slow.

The crucial moment came at the eleventh hole in the afternoon, when Jenkins holed a chip shot for four and won a hole that he seemed to have already lost. Hezlet had previously made a feature shot at the sixth, when he holed out from a bunker.

JENKINS FIRST TITLE.

Jenkins, who is very well known in golfing circles, had played good golf for a long time, but had never previously reached the semi finals. Hezlet has been described as the "darkest of horses." eH is only twenty-three years old and comes from Port Rush.

He is a member of a fine golfing family, and his sister, Mrs. Ross, won many honors as Miss May Hezlet.

The presentation of the beautiful cup was an interesting little ceremony on the clubhouse lawn. Lord Northbourne, the club president, made the presentation speech, and his graceful allusion to the American players was enthusiastically cheered by the British audience.

YANKEES OFF FOR FRANCE.

Practically all the American golfers leave tomorrow at 11 o'clock by boat from Dover for Calais, arriving in Paris at five in the afternoon. They will be accompanied by Sam Park, an American well known in Chicago, who is now living in Paris but who came to Sandwich expressly to see that every American player reached Paris in time for the French championship matches, which begin Tuesday morning. Thus we have only one day for practice.

n exciting series of matches is expected for a large number of fine English players are crossing, among them Runner-Up Hezlet and C. A. Palmer, who defeated Travers in the championship here.

Harvard 2d Crew to Row in England

Two Harvard crews pitted against each other in the Grand Challenge Cup race in connection with the Royal English regatta in July is the lineup with the Harvard second eight competing against the Union Boat Club of this city, which is made up of former Crimson oarsmen.

The Henley rules provide that a crew coached by a professional is ineligible and this eliminates the Harvard first crew, which is guided by Jim Wray.

Brown Will Coach Mound City Again

Edward J. Brown, Harvard, '14, coach of the Weld boat house crews at Harvard for the past two years, has practically decided to renew his contract with the Mound City Boat Club of St. Louis and will leave for the West the latter part of June.

Mr. Brown made a good record last season at St. Louis, and received offers [illegible] from boat clubs at Duluth and Grand Rapids.

Dr. Ayer Favors the Adoption of Sculling as a College Sport

Dr. James Bourne Ayer of the Union Boat Club, who will take Paul Withington's place in the Diamond sculls at the English Henley next June, is a firm believer in placing sculling on a firm intercollegiate competition.

"I favor the adoption of sculling as an intercollegiate sport," says Dr. Ayer. "If put on the basis of other intercollegiate sport, as an adjunct to a regular regatta program, and in this I am told that we have a precedent in the case of Oxford and Cambridge, would accomplish the following:

"More men would be seriously concerned with rowing in that a real opportunity would then be offered for candidates now clearly ineligible for sweep rowing because of size; men approaching varsity calibre would be encouraged to work out their faults in a sculling boat with the double object in view of representing the college in sculling and of bettering their chances for the eight, and thirdly, the increased number of good scullers thereby created would be storing up for themselves one of the healthiest and pleasantest forms of exercise open to man throughout life."

Fate of "Teddy" Seems to Follow Roosevelt Clan

Score another downfall for the Progressive party. First it was Theodore Roosevelt, the ex-President who hit the dust hard, but gracefully.

Another Roosevelt has hit the toboggan, Archie Roosevelt, Harvard freshman and former candidate for the management of the Harvard freshman crew.

Three weeks ago all the candidates for the job of handling the yearlings' water business were eliminated leaving Archie and two other striplins, whose father's names probably never emblazoned the pages of "Who's Who" and who never ran up a bill much less St. Juan hill.

In the melee all three worked overtime to land the plum, one bright youth narrowly escaping a ducking for a brilliant idea, that each varsity oarsman as he pulled into drydock should be greeted with a smoking cup of hot tea fresh off the chafing dish.

To cut a long and withal sad story on the bias, the announcement was made yesterday that Percival Spurr Howe, Jr., of West Newton, had been appointed manager of the freshman crews and Harrison Gardner Reynolds of Milton, assistant manager. The third member of the "Three Heavenly Twins" was plainly left at the post and the last seen of Archie was as he strolled down Mt. Auburn street to his bunk on the Gold Coast murmuring, "Oh, would that I were not the son of such an illustrious father."

HARVARD NINE OUTHITS TIGERS AND WINS, 4-1

Mahan Pitches Well for Crimson and Holds Princeton to Five Safeties.

The Harvard nine came back to form after two defeats and downed Princeton 4 to 1 at Soldiers Field yesterday afternoon. The biggest crowd of the season turned out to see the struggle.

Eddie Mahan was trotted out for this important game and his selection was a good one. The Natick boy pitched one of his best games and in all but one inning was pretty safe. In the fifth, three singles in a row were made off him but only one run was netted.

Errors by Princeton helped Harvard to at least two of their runs. Deyo pitched good ball for Princeton and kept the hits pretty well scattered.

Some brilliant fielding featured the game, with the players of both teams contributing. In the opening inning Milholland pulled down a long fly on the run in centre field and received a big hand. "Spoke" Hardwick made two good catches and Gannet made a one-hand spear of a liner that was very sensational.

To open the game, Eddie Mahan misdirected one of his shoots into the short ribs of Hanks, the first Princeton man to bat. Hardly had the Tiger reached first when he was hit again when Wingate attempted to pull off a fast double play. Gill hit to Clark, who fielded the ball to Wingate, forcing Hanks at second, and the Harvard shortstop threw to first, but the ball struck Hanks in the face. The Tiger was stunned for several minutes, but continued to play. The next two men were easy victims and Princeton went scoreless.

Harvard scored two runs in their half of the second, both lucky. Gannett tapped to the pitcher. Hardwick slammed out a single and Milholland followed with a short Texas leaguer over first. Greene recovered and his throw would have beaten Mahan to the plate if it had not gone wild.

Hardwick kept on running, round third on to [illegible] and when Deyo dropped the return throw from the catcher, was safe. Nash ended the inning with a tap to third base.

In the fifth inning Princeton made its only tally, a well earned run. After one had been retired, Bolton, Wall and Deyo rapped out clean singles, Bolton crossing the rubber on the third hit.

For the [illegible] four innings Mahan had everything his own way and Princeton did not even threaten. Harvard's final runs came in the eighth inning. With one out Mahan singled and was advanced to third on a hit by Hardwick, [illegible] scored when the Princeton third sacker allowed the ball to go through his legs on the throw to third. Hardwick continued to second and scored when Waterman [illegible] out a long three bagger.

Oliver Ames Says Extra Ballast Will Keep Defiance Up

Oliver Ames, fleet captain of the Eastern Yacht Club and member of the syndicate backing the Defiance, who returned from Europe two weeks ago, where he was allowed to visit the Shamrock IV., is in a particularly good position to judge the relative merits of the respective yachts.

He has returned today from Marblehead, where, with the other members of the syndicate, he inspected the Defiance previous to her being towed around the cape to Greenwich, Ct.

"I don't know who will win," said Mr. Ames, "but I guess we can; we always have."

Asked about the points of the Defiance which particularly impressed him, Ames pleaded a lack of knowledge about the finer points of the boat. But he said:

"One has to be very careful when on board the Defiance, not to fall overboard. There is no rail running around the deck, the water being allowed to swish across the deck and then off again, thus causing no resistence. She is built for nothing but the race, almost on the line of a canoe."

He was asked if the immense mast would increase the danger of the boat capsizing and explained that ballast of tons of lead would be hung over the side of the vessel to keep her upright in the water.

Mr. Ames said that no member of the syndicate would sail on the boat during the race.

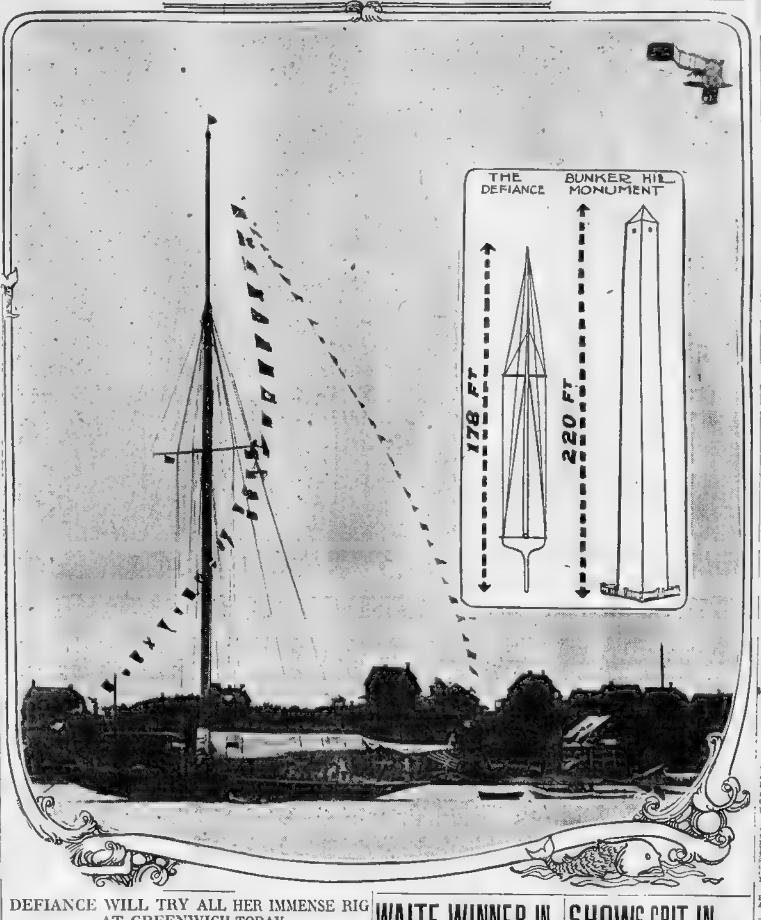
DEFIANCE IN DARING SAIL TRIAL TODAY

Bath Cup Boat Hoists Canvas Today; Vanitie, Tomorrow

THE CUP YACHT DEFIANCE, SHOWING HER LOFTY RIG WITH AN AEROPLANE SAILING AFT HER.



DEFIANCE WILL TRY ALL HER IMMENSE RIG AT GREENWICH TODAY.

By HARRY C. THOMAS.

Two of the big cup class boats—Defiance and Vanitie—will be in Long Island Sound under sail this week.

The Defiance, after a long tow from Marblehead around Cape Cod, arrived at Greenwich, Ct., late yesterday, and early this morning will have the first test of its sails and its big stick, 148 feet above deck.

The Defiance came to an anchorage off the Indian Harbor Yacht Club at 9 o'clock last night. It gave George S. Pynchon the fright of his life. The yacht was due at 1 o'clock and when it failed to appear Mr. Pynchon and other members of the syndicate took a private yacht and went as far as Bridgeport in search of it. The Defiance had very bad weather around the Cape, but is in good condition for the sail test today.

Everybody in the country will watch the results of the sail test of the Defiance, for such an unusual rig carried by this boat is an unknown quantity, even to the designer, George Owen of Newton, and he frankly admits that he may have to cut it down.

New England citizens, possibly because Boston money is helping to finance the boat, and possibly because the boat is New England designed and built, are pinning their faith to the Defiance as the boat to win the trial series, which starts June 2.

The Defiance took an anchorage off the Indian Harbor Yacht Club last night and the big steel racing schooner Irolita and the power cruiser Zipalong, tenders to the cup yacht, were moored near by. The boats immediately dressed ship upon their arrival and the Indian Harbor Yacht Club banged out a salute to the big cup defence sloop.

Captain Sesah B. Howell said that although the weather around the Cape was thick the Defiance stood the tow well and was in prime condition for its test today.

The sails were bent coming up the Sound and all is in readiness for the test. Everybody aboard is hoping for a good, strong breeze today, for they feel that if there is to be any trouble with the rig the sooner they find out the better it will be for all concerned.

KEEN INTEREST IN TRIALS.

George S. Pynchon of New York and E. Walter Clark of Philadelphia, managing directors of the syndicate, are on the scene at Greenwich and several big private yachts will go outside with the Defiance to watch the work.

Designer Owen arrived last night at Greenwich and will go aboard the [illegible] today for the trial. The sails were found to be a perfect fit and were easily bent. Every sail will be set if the weather permits, and the big New England craft will be made to show its paces under every possible condition.

The Vanitie, Alexander Smith [illegible] bronze cup boat, [illegible] at Nepon[illegible] at 4 o'clock this morning for a tow around Cape Cod to City Island, New York, and will on Monday be given a tryout of its sails.

The Defiance and Vanitie are the two boats that the majority of the Boston yachtsmen are favoring to pull off a victory from the Herreshoff boat Resolute. Several bets have been made by State Street men, friends of those financially interested in the three big boats, and the odds [illegible] instance were on the Resolute.

The Resolute is still being tried out around Narragansett Bay, in the vicinity of Bristol, R. I., and has had its rig changed several times.

According to those in charge of the boat, the Resolute is proving faster with the mast in the forward step, giving a shorter head sail than in the after step, but it has not been determined which rig will be [illegible] Tuesday, June 2, the date of the first race.

DATES OF N. Y. Y. C. RACES.

The New York Yacht Club has arranged the following series of races during June, July and August, although some will not count in the trials to pick the boat to defend the American Cup:

Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, June 2, 3 and 4, the races will be off the Glen Cove, N. Y., station of the New York Yacht Club. [illegible] count in the trials, but will [illegible] tuning up races. The managers of the three boats, however, feel that these first three races will be worth as much to them as any, as it will give each boat a line on the others.

For the Long Island Sound races on June 2, 3 and 4, the start will be at 12 noon, off the western end of Great Captain's Island.

The start of the Sandy Hook [illegible] June 10, 11 and 12 will be [illegible] Ambrose Channel light vessel [illegible] a. m. each day. For a windward and leeward course each leg will be fifteen miles, a total distance of thirty miles. For the triangle, each side will be ten miles. Off Newport, July 8, 9, 11, 13 and 14, the start will be [illegible] a mark four miles fr[illegible] [illegible] both windward and leeward will be thirty miles. The start in these races will be at 11 30 a. m. each day.

EXETER BLANKS HARVARD FRESHIES

Welles Pitches His Seventh Shutout, While Preps Score Single Tally Off Wilcox.

EXETER, N. H., May 23.—Exeter took the Harvard freshmen into camp this afternoon, 1 to 0, and thereby annexed her ninth consecutive victory. The game from the start was a pitchers' duel between Welles and Wilcox.

Welles struck out twelve men and did not pass a man and not a Harvard runner with the exception of Captain Abbott, who stole, reached second base. Welles has now pitched eight wins for Exeter and on seven occasions has shut out his opponents.

Harvard threw away the game in the ninth inning when Neal reached first on a fielder's choice with two down, stole second and scored when Ames dropped Hutchinson's high fly to left field.

FORDHAM SWAMPS HOLY CROSS NINE

Worcester Collegians Beaten by 10 to 0 Score in Poorly Played Game.

WORCESTER, May 23.—Holy Cross, through loose playing, errors and inability to hit, was easily shut out today by Fordham, the Bronx collegians winning out on Fitton field by a score of 10 to 0.

The visiting players scored in the first on two singles and a squeeze play, Berrigan crossing the counting station. They did not have any difficulty in scoring again in the fourth, fifth, eighth sessions, and in their final time at bat, when four Fordham men scored.

Martin, who pitched a fourteen inning game against Holy Cross in New York two weeks ago, did the honors for Fordham and proved a puzzle to the Worcester collegians who found him for but five hits.

Geo. Stallings Lauds Chance and Yankees

"Big Chief" Stallings, the leader of the Braves, figures Frank Chance's New York Yankees as the real dark horse of the American League.

"Chance is one of the greatest leaders in the game," said Stallings. "It has taken a lot of nerve and a whole lot of executive ability to do what he has done. He simply cleaned house of all the dead wood. He built up one of the best clubs in the Johnson circuit.

"There is no one in the American League that has any better pitchers than Chance. To my mind he has the greatest pitcher in the game in Caldwell. That fellow has the greatest curve ball I ever saw, and he has almost as much speed as Johnson."

In this article, written for the Boston AMERICAN, "Bob" Fitzsimmons, former heavyweight champion of the world, tells how to defend yourself from all attacks without the aid of any weapon.

By BOB FITZSIMMONS.

I have never had a pistol in my hands in my lifetime, not because there hasn't been a time when I thought that I needed one, but I always had implicit confidence in my two hands when it comes to the point of having trouble with any person.

I have never gone looking for trouble in my life and never can I remember when I lost my temper either inside or outside of the prize ring. I have never struck a man outside the squared circle, no matter what the provocation might have been, for fear of the serious results which might have ensued from so doing.

There have been many, many times, however, that I have been called upon to defend myself from personal attack at the hands of men who thought they had a grievance against me, but whose animosity was usually aroused by my defeating their favorite in a professional battle.

A VALUABLE ART.

I want everybody who reads this story to stop and think over what it means to be able at all times to protect one's self from assaults by beggars, ruffians and other trouble seekers on the streets of most any large city where characters of this calibre are to be found constantly.

A woman with a few moments' practice each day can become as adept in the art of self defence within a short time as can a man; all she needs is quick action, instant thought and absolute confidence in her ability to defend herself.

Often while I have been traveling with theatrical companies I have instructed the young women in the shows in the various ways the "masher" or flirt may be repulsed. In many cases I afterward learned that my advice had been followed with such good effect that the victim was unable to be about again for several days.

Jiu-Jitsu is the foundation of my method, but I have endeavored to eliminate from it the possibility of breaking bones or causing a lasting injury.

DESCRIBES METHODS TO USE.

One of the best tricks and one which I have used with good effect on several ocasions is to quickly pull a man's coat down over his shoulders and around his arms, pinning both his hands to his side, leaving him helpless and at the mercy of his opponent.

When a man comes up with a pistol or a knife, first try to engage him in conversation, advance toward him until within striking distance. Remain cool. When the prospective assailant is off his guard trip him with a quick movement of the arm, cause him to loose his hold on the pistol, which you can pick up before he regains his feet.

Women who are compelled to travel unescorted after dark in large cities need to be prepared to defend themselves much of the time.

WOMEN SHOULD EXERCISE.

Every woman should devote herself to physical culture when able to do so. It not only helps her to guard against insults, but gives her a more graceful poise, healthier color, a stronger body and a clearer mind.

Isn't it much nicer to see a person walking along with head erect and shoulders thrown back with some apparent confidence in himself than to see one stoop-shouldered with apparently an entire lack of ambition?

I'm sure you would prefer to see the former, and a few minutes of physical culture each day will make you that way.

Bond, Michigan Star, Smashes Record in 220

DETROIT, Mich., May 23.—"Chink" Bond, Michigan's star sprinter, set up a world's record in the 220-yard dash today, stepping the distance in 20 4-5 seconds, in the annual meet held to pick candidates for the intercollegiates.

Three officially accredited watches caught the Wolverine flier in this time while a fourth registered 21 flat.

Trainer "Steve" Farrell says that today's wind was not sufficient to interfere with the time, and will put the performance before the A. A. U. committee to stand as a world's record.

YALE BASEBALL MAKEUP SETTLED

NEW HAVEN, May 23.—Yale has made a final baseball shift before it begins its series with Princeton and Harvard. The series with the Tigers opens here next Saturday, and the Eli team is just rounding into shape.

The team has developed a "punch" which accounts for the victories over Pennsylvania, Williams, Holy Cross, Dartmouth and Lafayette. Games were won last year by tremendous batting rallies and the ability to hit the ball in a pinch is being developed by the present team.

The infield is one of the strongest ever produced by any Yale team. Captain Blossom leads the nine with the stick. His average is .333 and the average of the entire infield, including Blossom, Cornish, Reilly and Pumpelly is .290. Two of the outfield, Falsey and Middlebrook, have yet to make an error. The batting average of the outfield is, however, only .238.

The change in playing order which has just come into effect has given right field to Johnny Hanes and has installed Mudge as first string catcher. Mudge caught for the freshmen last year. Hunter, who was the regular backstop, has been tried the past week in right field, but is not fast enough for a regular berth. Hunter will be reserved as substitute catcher and pinch hitter.

"Pie" Way, who started as third string twirler, has worked his way abreast of Gile and "Buster" Brown, the regular pitchers. It is probable that Way will start the Princeton game here next Saturday. He has remarkable control and an effective spit ball.

Cornell Wins from Yale in 9-2 Game

ITHACA, N. Y., May 23.—Cornell won from Yale, 9 to 2, this afternoon, before an immense Navy day crowd. Regan was invincible except in one inning, while the Cornell batters got to Gill and Brown was no better. Regan struck out twelve Yale men. Adair's two three-baggers were the feature. The score:

OUIMET'S FALL NOT CALAMITY

Merely One of the Happenings That Are Frequent Whenever Golfers Meet.

By H. P. FARRINGTON.

Ever since Francis Ouimet, my club-mate from the Woodland Golf Club, started on his trip across the water I have been asked the question "Has Francis got a chance?" This was answered by his defeat on Wednesday, but if the championship were to start again tomorrow, my reply to layman and golfer would not differ, even though the open champion has suffered defeat.

The breaks in a game of golf are just the same as in any other competition and if, as Alex Smith says, "The Lord is with yer" you'll win, if not just the reverse.

Following the trail of several of the golf writers abroad, after the defeat of their candidates Ray and Vardon at the Country Club last Summer, there would appear to be an opportunity to reciprocate the sentiments that were voiced, which declared Ouimet's win a fluke. Here in Boston it would be possible to claim that Ouimet's defeat was a fluke, but that is hardly a fair attitude.

MUCH HOPE FOR FUTURE.

Whatever the breaks in a game of golf, the result is the only thing that is filed away in the archives to look back upon and praise or mourn. There was not a golfer in the State who did not feel almost a personal loss when he read of Ouimet's defeat Wednesday, but this same throng is unanimous in stating "He is young yet; he'll get another chance and he'll do better next time."

This is the proper sentiment. Ouimet went abroad with the title of open champion with its heavy burden, and the wish deep in his heart to "make good" for his friends and his country.

It may have proved too much of a strain, but I am inclined to believe that the fortunes of war were not with him, and that his defeat was more unusual than the upsets registered in any tourney.

Golf is not like many branches of athletics where the best man always wins, for the veriest duffer has the same chance of making a one on a hole as the most expert. The expert will have twice as many twos, threes, and fours as the "dub," but when two men stand on a tee the chances are equal until the duffer makes the mistakes that show his true class. There is not much luck in golf, but more science.

Some days the hole looks like a soup tureen, others like a buttonhole. One day every putt drops easily, the next every one seems to be possessed, and slides off at the last instant, while the golf otherwise is just as good as on the day that everything goes down.

EXPERIENCE WILL HELP.

The experience Ouimet has gained by this much of his trip abroad is an education in itself and will stand in good stead in the future just as the first appearance on the boards often gives the new comer stage fright. Ouimet was not stage-struck, but he was very much in the limelight. He is a veteran now as far as competition is concerned, and his brilliant future ahead, which will be made up of victories and defeats, with the latter in the minority.

He is temperamentally fitted for golf, but his rise to fame was too meteoric. He may show wonderful golf in the future, but it will not be after nine hours of sleep, such as he had before the Country Club final, that meant defeat, not alone to himself, but to the United States.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN DRIVERS READY TO RACE

Big Field of Entries for 500-Mile Motor Race at Indianapolis Will Undergo Elimination Process Commencing Monday.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The motor racing battle of the year will be driven at Indianapolis on Saturday next and once again the great drivers of the world will meet in competition, the foreigners to defend their reputation and prestige of last year and the Americans to wrest from the invaders the trophy emblematic of the world's greatest speed contest.

The interest this year is greater than in any previous event, as shown by the fact that there are something like forty-five applicants for the honor of competing in this event. The rules of the race and the size of the track will permit but thirty cars to compete, hence one-third of the entry list must be eliminated before the day of the contest. This means that there will be racing and speed work galore, that many hopes will be dashed during the elimination tests, and that some fifteen drivers and fifteen mechanics, who today are hoping that they will be eligible to compete in the finals, will sit in the grand stand and watch their more fortunate fellows travel around the track striving for fame and prizes.

The elimination trials will be inaugurated tomorrow instead of Wednesday, as previously proposed. The extra two days have been necessary to give the field a thorough test and to give some of the contestants time to readjust their machines for the final test after they have been through the elimination work.

Contestants generally, save a few, such as Goux, Boillot and Dawson, are worrying their heads off as to whether they will be able to qualify or not, including even such notables as DePalma and Barney Oldfield, whose cars, though remarkably consistent, are not as fast as some of the others. Every effort will be made to impregnate machines of this class with the necessary dynamite to put them over, and afterward to restore them to their original condition.

A tenseness of feeling is evident on the course unlike anything ever experienced in five-hundred-mile racing. All of the entrants with work to do are laboring in closed garages despite the heat. Only speedway officials and a few attaches are permitted within. A grim determination to keep his secrets locked up inside him, lest his opponent profit thereby, seems to possess everybody. The chances to survive is too slim to impart any gratis information.

Practically all of the contestants are now on the ground, the balance of the foreigners, including Jean Chassagne, holder of the world's hour record, Albert Guyot, runner-up in the Grand Prix of Le Mans last year, Rene Thomas, his teammate, familiarly called the Parisian acrobat; Josef Christiaens, the Belgian crack, and Arthur Duray, world's kilometer champion, having arrived yesterday. Their cars were scheduled for their first workout this morning. All of them, notably the Delage, are sensationally fast, with speeds up to 120 miles an hour to their credit.

Goux and Boillot, who have been on the track for some time, have little to do with their countrymen, being particularly peeved at Duray, who is driving a car of the same make as their own. The latter machine, they say, should not be recognized, being a private entry, made by M. Meunier, the Swiss chocolate king. Measuring only 183 cubic inches, little more than a Ford, they deem it unfit for 500-mile competition. The outcome of the internecine struggle will be awaited with interest.

The American field seems to have no great dread regarding the foreigners as in the list of native pilots is included men that have been proven equal to almost any exigency. Harry Grant is for the time being looked upon as a foreigner, as he is driving a car of English make, and today he is not looked upon as an American defender of the trophy.

There are, however, other men of equal ability who will drive American-made cars. Joe Dawson, who won the race in a National in 1912, is to drive a privately-entered Marmon, a car with which he has in previous years done some exceedingly clever work. In the practice work for his car Dawson has traveled the circuit of two and a half miles in 1 87. This clocking means that he had equaled the track record. His average was better than 93 miles an hour and on the straightaways he went over the century.

Ray Harroun will be a possible starter, he having elected to drive the third of the Maxwell cars. Bob Burman, the daring driver and the man who last year showed phenomenal speed; Barney Oldfield, who is considered as among the best men in the game; Billy Knipper and Ralph DePalma, the winner of the Grand Prize, and the man who made such a plucky finish last year, and so on down the list, will all be there to "do or die," figuratively speaking.

RIDES THROUGH A RAINSTORM

Transcontinental Motorcycle Record Is Lowered Approximately Nine Days.

After eleven and a half days spent in the saddle of a motorcycle, Erwin G. Baker recently arrived in New York city, clipping approximately nine days off the previous transcontinental record for this type of machine. Baker left San Diego on May 3 and finished his trip in the metropolis on May 14. He followed behind the storm area, traveling from west to east. During the raining period he covered one stretch of seventy-two miles through wind and water in one hour and fifty-five minutes.

By ERWIN G. BAKER.

A matter of foresight which helped me was the planting of tanks of gasoline ahead of me at remote spots where I knew that no gas would have been obtainable. Thus I avoided fuel troubles.

Still another factor, of course, was my machine. I rode a 1914 seven-horsepower twin two-speed Indian, with electric equipment and cradle spring frame. In all the distance of 3,497 miles I had no mechanical difficulties whatever.

Between Mammoth, Cal., and Glames I rode sixty-four miles on the railroad ties, crossing trestles and bridges.

In a 1,027-mile desert stretch of sand, cactus, heat, thirst and desolateness I traveled 115 miles without seeing a single living thing—except Gila monsters and snakes.

Four mountain ranges were negotiated. At one point at the Northern end of Arizona I climbed from 200 feet below sea level to an altitude of 9,647 feet into the mountain snows. It was in this mountain work that the two-speed showed its supreme qualities. My brake power, too, in making the precipitous descent of the winding mountain trails, never failed me for a moment. If it had, I might not be able now to tell this story.

When I struck Indiana the authorities raised the speed limit for one day, so that I could do my best. And I did, making 276 miles in 11¼ hours. I am a Hoosier, and the welcome and encouragement which the people of my home State gave me as I passed from town to town was a generous and appreciated demonstration.

From Columbus, Ohio, to Greensburg, Pennsylvania, the going was bad. I ploughed my way through 232 miles of mud—and was mighty glad to get out of it onto firm ground again.

My final dash was a 418-mile one from Greensburg, Pennsylvania to New York city. This I did in twenty hours, sixteen of which was actual riding.

Total time for the trip was 11 days, 12 hours and 10 minutes, during which I took only 46 hours sleep, about four hours per day. Average mileage per day was 304.

I took along an extra electric light bulb, expecting to need it with such hard riding. But I arrived in New York with the original bulb still in its socket and burning brightly. My batteries were still in fine condition and needed no recharging or attention during the ride.

In my estimation it was the Cradle Spring Frame above all that contributed to my success. It absorbed all road shocks and vibrations and this, of course, saved all my strength and besides enabled me to make speed over roughest roads.

GLIDDEN TOUR NOT ATTRACTIVE

New Englanders Fail to Display Interest Characteristic of Previous Contests.

There does not seem to be the great interest in the coming Glidden trophy test that has characterised the tour in previous years. New England, which has heretofore been particularly active and interested in the tour, seems to have but little use for it, and whereas in years gone by many representatives were to be found in the race, it does not look as though this territory will figure to any degree in the entries for the contest of next month.

The closing of the contest for the Glidden trophy to cars selling for less than $1,200 is something which has brought forth considerable unfavorable comment and undoubtedly has, in a great measure, eliminated from the contest some few cars which would otherwise have completed.

It seems rather strange, according to those who are familiar with affairs, that any barrier preventing the present holder of the trophy from competing or defending its title to the same should be raised as this present time. Some people are mean enough to say that perhaps the committee has concluded that the cheap car—that is, cheap in price—will again make a record which would have an unwholesome effect upon future entries from higher priced cars. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the Glidden tour has in the past been productive of a great amount of unnecessary friction both from a competitive and argumentative standpoint, it at one time driving its way into the courts.

The present holders of the trophy had fully intended to defend their right to the same by entering a team of three cars, but, owing to the new restrictions, their intentions will amount to naught. It is, however, possible that a team of these cars will unofficially start from Chicago at the same time as the competitors for the Glidden trophy, follow the same identical rules and make an unofficial drive, reporting the same at the end of the trip, not to the American Automobile Association, but to the public at large.

Another way, which is perhaps much better for the trophy holders to do, is to enter into competition for the Anderson trophy, which is limited to cars selling for $1,200 or under, and to compare the work in this class with the work of the Glidden tour winners whoever they may be.

It seems rather singular and perhaps unfortunate that this change in rules should be made the year that the tour ends in Boston, the home of the donor of the trophy and virtually the home of the holder of the same.

TIRE MAINTENANCE.

Tire maintenance has always been a great problem with motor car owners and this has been reduced to a minimum, it is believed, by the policy adopted by the J. W. Potter Company. This company has special plans whereby it keeps tires purchased from them in good shape free of charge during the natural life of the shoe or tube. This means considerable to car owners.

Inside History of Standardized Car

For the purpose of getting the inside history of the success of Standardized automobile building to incorporate in a text book to be used in physics classes throughout the country, Professor R. F. Myers of Bloomington, Ind., high school is to don overalls and go into the big plant of the Cole Motor Car Company at Indianapolis.

For the past year J. J. Cole has been promoting the teaching of the automobile in connection with the study of physics in high schools of the country. Professor Myers was one of the pioneer high school teachers to adopt the plan. At present the different schools are using the regular Cole technical bulletin written by Chief Engineer Charles Crawford as a text book.

Factory Trip For Buyers

A one hundred-mile demonstration to a prospective purchaser of an automobile is an unusual thing, but when the demonstration is coupled with an educational trip through a great automobile factory, it becomes a great selling asset in the hands of the manufacturer or dealer.

The Centaur Motor Company of Chicago, representing the Jeffery line, have taken advantage of the location of the Jeffery factory at Kenosha, just fifty miles north of Chicago, by organising weekly trips to the Jeffery factory for their livest prospects.

The first trip was made on Thursday of last week when eight individual buyers went to the Jeffery factory.

Motor Cars Not Built in a Day

"Moline 40-horsepower motor cars were not born in a night—they were not created in a year, but are the outcome of ten years experience," says President W. H. Van Dervort of the Moline Automobile Company, makers of the largest car selling at $1,550.

"Our product is not built in enormous quantities and never will be. Moline cars are built with a thoroughness that is not surpassed in any motor car factory. The only goal which the company strives to reach is perfection, quality and serviceability and to give Moline owners entire satisfaction.

Motorcycle Club Will Hold Run

Arrangements are practically complete for the seventh annual endurance run of the New Jersey Motorcycle club of Newark. This year's run will be held May 30 and 31 and will be to Baltimore and return. A number of handsome awards are offered to those finishing with the best scores. The route as scheduled leads through Trenton and Philadelphia. Returning the riders will go through Lancaster, Pa., Norristown, Trenton and Princeton, N. J. As the night of the 30th will be spent in Baltimore many of the contestants are planning to run on down to the National Capitol.

Solid Tires Are in U. S. Service

A few months ago General Blanco of the Mexican rebels narrowly escaped death while driving his automobile overland from Ensenada to Matamoros by the way of Capata when attacked by the Federals. That he was not killed by flying bullets was considered little short of a miracle, as the body of the car was literally riddled and all four pneumatic tires, which were 33 by 4 Firestone non-skid, were punctured by bullets. The vital organs of the car were not damaged, however, and the tires were quickly repaired by the Corpus Christi Tire and Rubber Company of Corpus Christi, and Blanco still enjoys an occasional joy ride in his warproof car.

A short time afterward an article pertaining to this scrimmage came to the attention of Captain Alfred Aloe, depot quartermaster of the United States Army at Galveston, who immediately fitted Firestone solid tires to his trucks.

USING WRENCH AS A VISE.

It is often desired to hold a small piece tight, in some way or other, while making repairs in the barn or on the road and you say, "If I only had a vise I could do this all right."

A good way to utilize the jaws of an ordinary monkey wrench is to adjust the jaws of the wrench until the piece to be held and a short machine bolt can be slipped into the space. Then unscrew the nut until the piece is held firm and with the aid of wrenches the piece can be held so rigidly that you'll wonder why you had never thought of the kink yourself.

Announces Decline in Block Tire Prices

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company has just announced a reduction of approximately 5 per cent. in the price of Goodyear individual block motor truck tires.

According to advice received from the factory at Akron, this was made possible by the constantly increasing demand for this type of tire by motor truck operators. Raising the production volume lowered the cost to an extent sufficient to warrant a 5 per cent. decrease in selling price, which puts the block tire on the same basis as the endless tire. In other words, a truck owner can buy a block tire at the same price he would have to pay for a demountable or pressed-on tire.

This should be welcome news to many truck operators who have heretofore hesitated to equip with block tires because of their higher price, and also to those who have so equipped in spite of the cost.

REMOVING VERDIGRIS.

Sometimes a car that has been laid away for the Winter without a protective coating of vaseline over its brass parts will be found to look very shabby due to a coating of verdigris on them. Removal of this, which seems to have actually eaten into the metal, is difficult with the ordinary metal polish, even when aided by elbow grease of the most energetic kind. A little wood alcohol added to the polish will frequently make its action more energetic. A good plan is to apply the mixture of polish and alcohol and allow it to dry, afterward rubbing with the mixture. Several treatments of this should remove the most stubborn encrustation.

Cyclecar Run Is Popular

Final arrangements for the two days run of the Cyclecar Club of New England were completed at the meeting held at the Hotel Oxford yesterday noon. President E. P. Blake of the club and Chairman C. M. Whelden of the Runs and Tours Committee, were particularly pleased with the interest that is being shown, there being something like thirty-four cars entered.

The start will be made from the Hotel Oxford at 9 o'clock next Saturday morning and the little machines will be raced over a very hard course that has been selected, covering in the two days time over 250 miles.

On Saturday the route will be through South Framingham and Marlboro to Worcester, where the machines will check in at 12.15. An hour will be spent for luncheon and then the run will continue through the Brookfields, Spencer, Warren, Palmer to Springfield, the night stop. The cars will check in there at 5.30. The distance is about 100 miles over the road.

That night there will be a banquet at the Kimball Hotel, and it will be arranged to exhibit the various makes of cyclecars in the foyer or about the hotel somewhere so that it will take on the semblance of a cyclecar show. On Sunday morning the cars will be started back at 9 [illegible] over another route. This will go through [illegible], Holyoke, Easthampton, Northampton, South Deerfield, Deerfield, Greenfield, Millers Falls, Athol, Templeton, Gardner to Fitchburg. The cars will be due there at [illegible] o'clock. They will stay there until 3.30 dining and being entertained at the Johnsonia Hotel. Then the final leg of the run will be made through Leominster, Lancaster, Clinton, South Framingham, Wellesley, Needham, [illegible], Hyde Park to Boston, where they are due at 7 p. m.

EXPENSE IS BEING REDUCED

That sales conditions in the automobile field have been widely affected by the recent cuts in the price of gasoline, oil, tires and other supplies is the declaration of Joseph S. Donovan, the Studebaker Boston distributor, who says that many recent Studebaker buyers are persons who have heretofore remained out of the market, due to their former belief that maintenance expense was greater than they could afford.

"I had this increased efficiency brought home to me quite forcibly by a personal friend," said Mr. Benson. "This man owned a heavy, costly car last year. He decided that the cost of maintenance was too high, and changed last Winter to a Studebaker light 'Six.'

"Of course, the change resulted in a greatly increased mileage for each gallon of fuel. This saving was rendered all the more emphatic by the fact that he is now paying 12 cents per gallon for gasoline, instead of 20, this due to the general lowering of price which has featured the gasoline business all over the country.

"Though he has not yet bought any new tires, and expects to get much more than the guaranteed mileage out of his present set, he knows that, when the occasion arises, he can secure tires for his 'Six' at less than half the cost of those he bought for his last year's car.

"A satisfactory grade of lubricating oil can be bought for 25 per cent less than he paid a year ago and goes infinitely further in supplying the needs of his car.

"And a feature of which he is not yet aware is the lowered cost of Winter overhauling, adjustment and possible installation of repairs.

"His 'Six' is so designed that the owner himself, if he chooses, can take down any unit needing adjustment. If he has the work done at a garage this merit is just as strong, as the amount of labor involved is comparatively small, delivery is prompt and the bill is accordingly reasonable.

"The prospective motorist who may have had acquaintance with a 'garage man's delight,' will be amazed at the efficiency and economical record of a car of the light 'Six' class. We hear examples of this sort every day."

Re-enters the Motor Trade

George G. Reed Will Handle Vulcan Car in Boston.

The Vulcan Motor Car Company has opened a salesroom at No. 1003 Boylston street for the sale of Vulcan light cars. The new company is composed of George G. Reed and Atherton C. Gosse. Mr. Reed is well known in the automobile trade, having in the past represented Stearns, Pierce, Knox and National cars in Boston. During the years of 1905-6 Mr. Reed held the American track record for stock cars, made with a Stearns at Naragansett Park, Providence.

In 1901 Mr. Reed drove a Stearns car from coast to coast, and during the past year has edited an automobile journal. He has been closely identified with the industry for the past fourteen years.

Mr. Gosse is a graduate of the Lawrence Scientific School and is thoroughly versed in mechanics. He has handled the Merz cyclecar in New England for the past three months.

In speaking of his new connection Mr. Reed said, "I am proud to be connected with a concern with the reputation of the Vulcan Manufacturing Company. They have been tool makers for many years, and are thoroughly conversant with what a light car should be. The president of the company is the president of the First National Bank of Painesville, Ohio, and the other officers are men of very high standing in the business world. I know I shall have the backing of a concern who have a reputation second to none and ample capital to take care of their business in years to come. The car I have investigated and tried out thoroughly and its many good qualities I shall not try to enumerate here. I believe that there is a big market here for a well constructed car selling for a medium price, and with this idea in mind I have taken on the Vulcan line."

Takes Unusual Precautions

Severe Test to Be Given New Oakland Model.

On the last day of April a long, low car with an unpretentious gray body shot out from the doors of the Oakland Motor Car Company's plant at Pontiac, and this was the unceremonious beginning of one of the most important events of the year to the Oakland organization—the proving of a new model.

A great deal hangs on the journey of this car. And a great deal depends upon J. R. Preston, who pilots the car.

He is driving the car an average of [illegible] miles each day and his only instructions are to seek the roughest roads and mountainous country—for Oaklands have a reputation for hill-climbing to maintain. His route is from Detroit to Cleveland, Buffalo, New York up to Boston and then to Philadelphia and back to the factory.

An accurate record will be kept of gasolene and oil consumption, and upon the return the car will be dismantled and every bearing, every part at which wear is likely to occur, most rigidly inspected. Even should Preston's report prove unfavorable and the car pass inspection, it is not yet accepted. Nor will it be until several similar trips have been made. And even this is not considered sufficient evidence of reliability to warrant a $10,000,000 investment, for a second experimental car is nearing completion, only to be put through the same gruelling test.

WILL ENFORCE RULE OF CAUTION

No Exceptional Chances of Disaster Will Be Permitted in Big Race.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., May 23.—The characteristic dare-devil try of motor drivers will be modified by the restraining hand of caution when the two-mile dirt track of the Sioux City Speedway is opened the first four days of next July. While not presuming to set any speed limits on the entrants the speedway association will join the Indianapolis speedway management in insisting on an enforcement of the rule that motor parts particularly subject to wear and tear must be new within two days before the event is run.

While a few entries have already been made for the July races, the speedway management does not expect forfeits to be posted in any large number until after the Indianapolis races.

OPPORTUNITY TO HELP GOOD CAUSE

Contribute the Use of Your Car for a Day to Give Pleasure to Crippled and Orphaned Children

To give pleasure to others is one of the grandest things in this world. It is something the value of which cannot be summed up in dollars and cents. It has no mercenary value, but is something which every man and woman at some time or other takes pleasure in doing. The opportunities for such often present themselves, but seldom are they of such a character as the call for assistance which is now being sent out by the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association.

Each year this organization of stern business men devote one of their business days to the entertainment of the crippled, orphaned and destitute children of this section. A few years ago it was possible for the association to take care of the orphan's day affair without assistance, but the desire to be included among the original number has grown so that now it has become a difficult problem for the association to do that which it desires without disappointing many of the children.

This year the association plans to take 2,500 children and their attendants to Nantasket Beach on Wednesday, June 10. This is in itself a studendous undertaking and to provide lunch and various forms of entertainment that will make it a red-letter day for the children a considerable sum of money is needed. Further than that the matter of transportation is a serious problem. Already several hundred cars have been donated, and hundreds of dollars in cash have been subscribed but still both cars and cash are lacking. A donation of either would be greatly appreciated by the dealers association, and Manager Chester I. Campbell of No. 5 Park square, will be pleased to acknowledge the donations of either cash or cars. Both are greatly needed

Among those who have donated cars are: F. S. Aultman, Frederick Ayer, S. L. Ayres, B. H. Bain, W. F. Bartholomew, Henry Bartlett, N. S. Bartlett, C. W. Benson, James Benwick, Charles S. The response to the appeal for funds to defray the necessary expenses of the outing, such as the hiring of extra cars and the feeding of the children, has been very generous. Ball Player Drives a Motor Car

R. B. (Dutch) Leonard, the Red Sox twirler, is now the possessor of a handsome orange colored electrically equipped Mets speedster, which he proposes to take along with him on the road and enjoy pleasure trips during the hours of the morning when the team is not in action. Mr. Leonard, who is one of the most popular and youngest players on the Boston team, came here from California, and the fact that he waited until he got East before purchasing an automobile is quite a tribute to the Mets car. Pitcher Leonard had looked over the light car field thoroughly before he selected the gearless type of car.

Business Never Was Better

"Never in the history of Velie business," said Manager Bradfield of the Boston Branch, "have we had such a large number of advance sales as we have made in the new 1915 Velie 35. We are receiving from the factory about four carloads each week, and are still behind on our deliveries. The reason for the tremendous success of this new model lies in the fact that it offers exceptional value for the price. It is a roomy, comfortable car, up to the minute, and a little ahead in design; has all the power that can ever be demanded and delivers this power at a low cost.

Offers $500 as Additional Prize

The result of a discussion at the Bosch Magneto Company's New York offices, concerning the possibility of breaking the 500-mile record made by Joe Dawson in 1912, is the offering of an additional Bosch prize of $500 to the winner, providing he breaks the existing record of 78.72 miles per hour average for the 500 miles.

The Bosch Magneto and Bosch Plugs must be used by the winner to entitle him to this award, which will further augment the $600 already posted by the company for the winner if he uses Bosch equipment.

Five Reasons Why Men Change Tires

Goodyear Users This Year Increase 55 Per Cent

Faster than ever men are changing from other tires to Goodyears. There are more tire users—that is true; perhaps 20 per cent more than last year. But Goodyear sales have increased 55 per cent. So legions of these new users have discarded other tires.

Why They Change

Some change to end rim-cutting. And No-Rim-Cut tires offer them the only feasible way to do it.

Some have suffered needless blow-outs, due to wrinkled fabric. The only way to prevent them is the "On-Air" cure, and we alone employ it. It adds to our tire cost $1,500 daily.

Some fear loose treads. By a patent method we reduce this danger by 60 per cent in No-Rim-Cut tires.

And some want our All-Weather tread. A double-thick tread, as smooth as a plain tread, but with deep, sharp, tough projections. It grasps wet roads with a bulldog grip.

No other tire offers any one of these features. Yet every tire user knows he needs them all.

Resent Extra Prices

Some resent extra prices. There are 16 makes which this year cost you more than Goodyears—up to one-half more. And those prices are unjust.

No-Rim-Cut tires hold top place in Tiredom. They outsell any other, after millions of mileage tests. At least in the four ways cited they excel any rival tire. Then why should men pay for other tires from $5 to $14 more?

There is no reason. It is easy to build tires to undersell Goodyears, but none ever built tires worth more.

Goodyear prices are due to mammoth output, to efficient methods and to modest profit. Every added penny is an utter waste. Tell your dealer you want Goodyears, and at Goodyear prices. He will give them to you.

Majority of Cars Are Reliable

Reliability is no longer a question concerning standard cars. Economy and efficiency should be considered—all cars [illegible] for reliability and most of them [illegible], however, do not run efficiently. [illegible] speed, ease of control and cost of operation should be considered along with reliability—cost should be the last consideration for an indifferent product is of no value at any price. Modern manufacturing methods, however, permit [illegible] savings, and in time all the high grade cars will have to come down in price.

Probably the first of the old line manufacturers of high grade cars to make a material cut was Premier—this company was the first to market a six [illegible], whose four-cylinder cars commanded a price of over $3,000, when four-cylinder cars were in popular demand, and before the six dominated the field. The Premier-Weidely chassis has been proven over thousands of miles of hard-fought touring contests and individual tours of great magnitude, and the new price sets a new standard of value in high grade six-cylinder motor cars.

An Attractive Motor Truck Job

The Interboro Brewing Company of New York recently received its third consignment of Garfords, two five-ton trucks, which were delivered March 1, 1914. The brewery now operates a fleet of fifteen Garfords, this make having been decided on after a competitive test for one year of a Garford and five other trucks.

TOUR WITH THE AMERICAN MAPS

Vest Pocket Motor Tour Routes Within the Reach of All Motorists.

The handiest, most compact and most reliable map or touring maps and routes yet devised is the vest pocket motor tours, which does away with a big, cumbersome book or map. The main feature of the system is the use of small route cards. On each card is a complete routing of a trip, in one direction on one side of the card, and in the reverse on the other side. With a few of these handy cards in his pocket, the motorist is equipped for a long tour. Obviously, this is an exceptionally cheap kind of route information. Each route is numbered.

The cards have been compiled only for the East, covering Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and the New England States. Four key maps of this territory have been issued, each map showing the various routes and their numbers, so that after a trip has been mapped out the numbers may be noted and the corresponding cards purchased. The four key maps contain a detailed road map of New York city and vicinity, showing all New England and New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

These maps and cards can be obtained by addressing the Boston American Motor Tour Department, P. O. Box 3047, Boston, Mass., enclosing ten cents for each map desired and five cents for every route card ordered.

Corset Engineers Latest Addition

Milady of fashion may throw up her hands in horror, but just the same the up-to-date automobile manufacturer knows more about what she wears in corsets than she does.

"Corset engineers form an important part of our technical staff," J. H. MacAlman, local dealer of Stearns-Knight cars has been advised by his company in Cleveland, Ohio.

According to Mr. MacAlman the Stearns company explains that corsets are as vital to the success of a new automobile as expert engineering.

"The knowledge of what is doing in the corset world means thousands of dollars in sales and profit to the Stearns Company," according to their local dealer.

"It determines to a great extent, the style of upholstery," he says. "[illegible] [illegible] is asked to adopt a [illegible] [illegible] the upholstery [illegible] vastly different than if the [illegible] to maintain a [illegible] position. Because of that the [illegible] company is continually in touch with corset engineers in the European centres of fashion, who apprise them one year in advance what corset styles are to be so that upholstery of new cars may be built to conform so far as possible with the coming vogue of corsets.

WILL RAID MOTOR PLANT

Army of Dealers Make Plans for an Attack Upon the Manufacturer.

Next Wednesday the Overland factory will be [illegible] organized raid which will be unique in the history of the motor car industry. Some 300 Indiana dealers [illegible] customers who have [illegible] cars will descend upon the big plant and personally take delivery of 200 or more cars and drive them to their respective homes in the [illegible]. Although the Overland factory is turning out 230 cars daily with clock-like regularity, the Hoosier dealers, led by representatives of the [illegible] Automobile Company of Indianapolis, State distributors for the Overland, decided not to wait until their allotments came through by freight but to take delivery right at the factory and to drive the cars home over the roads.

The visitors will be entertained by the Overland Company during Wednesday and over night. Hotel accommodations have been arranged and the grounds of the Overland Club will be turned over to the guests Wednesday afternoon after a parade which undoubtedly will be the longest procession ever seen of automobiles of one make, and which will be perpetuated on a moving picture film, will be made. The start for Indianapolis will be made early Thursday morning.

ALL values are judged by comparison. You size up the worth and quality of any one article, by comparing it with several other similar articles. Then, and only then, you are in a position to make the most practical, intelligent and economical choice.

Therefore, before you choose your automobile, carefully compare the specifications, quality and equipment of the $950 Overland with the description of any of the $1200 cars. You'll find no material difference.

For instance:

The $950 Overland has a wheel base of 114 inches. A good many $1200 cars have even a shorter wheel base than this.

The $950 Overland has a thirty-five horsepower motor. Do you know of any $1200 car that can give you more power?

The $950 Overland has 33 inch x 4 inch tires. Again the same—in both size and quality—that you find on most $1200 cars.

The $950 Overland has electric lights throughout—exactly the same as any of the highest priced cars.

The $950 Overland is as roomy, comfortable and as luxuriously finished as any $1200 car.

The Overland equipment is just as complete, and of just as high a quality as the equipment of any $1200 car.

The steels used in the Overland are of the very highest grade; in fact the metals and materials used in the Overland are of the same quality as those found in the most costly cars in the world.

The Overland is just as accurately and precisely produced as any car on the market—regardless of price.

The more you compare this $950 car with cars costing 30% and even 40% more—the more you are brought to realize that to pay more than $950 for this type of car is absolutely unnecessary.

The Overland costs you less, because of our greater production.

Other manufacturers must charge you more, because of their smaller production.

And that is why the Overland is outselling every other similar car made. We are delivering 5000 Overlands a month right now.

WALTER CAMP'S STORY OF 1914 INTERCOLLEGIATES AT HARVARD STADIUM

Remarkable Rise of the Institution from a Mere Incidental Sport Described by the Famous Athletic Master—Old Records Look Tame Compared With Present Ones—Big Strides by Athletes

Written Expressly for the Boston Sunday American.

By WALTER CAMP.

What is known as the thirty-ninth annual field meet of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletics in America will be held at Cambridge, May 29 and 30.

This intercollegiate association really started its track games in connection with intercollegiate boat racing and the contests were held at Saratoga in 1874.

In the 100 yard dash when A. B. Nevins of Yale won in 10[illegible] seconds the account shows that he slipped and fell at the start, but his running was so fine that he overtook his competitors before the finish. If the watches were correct he must have had wonderful speed for those days.

In these events there was a three-mile run and also a seven-mile walk. The former was won by Downes of Wesleyan, and the latter by Eustis of the same University.

Cornell, even in those days, evidently maintained a reputation for mile runners, for Copeland of that university won the mile in 4m. 58½s. Maxwell of Yale won the high hurdle in 20½s.

TASTES HAVE CHANGED SINCE THEN.

The games that year and the following year, in which again the intercollegiate athletic contest took place the day previous to the intercollegiate regatta, were not classed formally as the intercollegiates, probably because they were not regarded as of sufficient importance.

It can easily be seen that tastes have changed in many ways since those days, for the comments show that the high hurdles and the 100 yard races were regarded as tame while the three-mile or seven-mile walk was considered most interesting and exciting. In [illegible] Taylor of Harvard won the seven and three-mile walks.

In those days there was also a contest for graduates, and Eustis of Wesleyan, already noted as the winner in 1874, won the graduates' seven-mile walk.

Union appears in these contests with Culver as their representative, winning the quarter-mile run; Barber of Amherst, the mile run; Platt of Williams, the mile walk, Trumbull of Yale, the half-mile run.

How the Meet Was Developed.

In the following year, 1876, a challenge cup, valued at $500, and known later as the Mott Haven cup was presented to the Intercollegiate Association to be awarded every year to the college winning the most first prizes. In case of a tie in the number of first prizes, the number of second prizes [illegible] the holder of the cup.

It indicates the development and spread of athletic interests that we should now be counting, instead of only the winners, five places, first, second, third, fourth and fifth.

The cup was won in that year by [illegible] who took four first prizes [illegible] half-mile run, putting the [illegible] three mile walk and baseball throw. It may be interesting to those of the present day to know that the distance of throwing the baseball was 3[illegible] feet 6 inches and [illegible] was the winner [illegible] that any colleges [illegible] generally represent [illegible] intercollegiate [illegible] other sports.

In [illegible] the games were first held at Mott Haven and for this, as well as the following two years, 1878 and 1879, Yale sent no representatives. The year 188[illegible], however, these athletic meets had taken on very definite importance as a standard sport [illegible] perhaps, then they would have been classed as a minor sport they were in a fair way to become such and from that day began the gradual cutting down of records started in [illegible] by Wake[illegible] of Yale, who brought the high hurdle record down from 1[illegible] to 1[illegible]. It that [illegible]

[illegible] considered [illegible] but it [illegible] those who have seen [illegible] repeatedly at [illegible] record [illegible] that the most noteworthy [illegible] the [illegible] over, [illegible]

They Jump a Foot Higher in These Days

[illegible] the record [illegible] high jump a foot higher [illegible] and in 1880 [illegible] of Yale established a mile record of 4 minutes [illegible] seconds [illegible] for seven years.

[illegible] these games after [illegible] held at Mott Haven for five [illegible] the first three of which [illegible] won and the last two [illegible], were transferred to the [illegible] Grounds, New York.

[illegible] interesting to know that [illegible] year the tug of war [illegible] introduced and in 1880, La[illegible] tug of war team, [illegible] one and [illegible] Harvard.

[illegible] same year a notable [illegible] W. H. Goodwin of Harvard appeared and won both the [illegible] and half-mile runs, making them record of 51 1-5 seconds the quarter, and 2 minutes 2 second in the half. [illegible] first won the cup in [illegible] then made the remarkable record of winning seven [illegible] right.

In the [illegible] first year, 1886, the decision [illegible] the deadly hook upon the final heat of the 100 yard between Rogers of Harvard and Sherrill of Yale, the contest being so close that it was impossible for anyone to tell until the judge's decision, which was rendered in favor of Rogers.

It should be noted that in 1884 the contests were taken from the Polo Grounds and transferred to the grounds of the Manhattan Club.

In the year 1890, the plan of counting first places only, except in case of tie, was abandoned and counting by points was introduced, the first place counting five points, the second place two points, and the third place one point.

In 1[illegible], this point counting system was further altered by making a first place five points, second place three points, third place two points and fourth place one point. This year a further alteration has been made by counting a fifth place one point and increasing the value of the second, third and fourth by one point.

Last year Penn won the meet with 24 points to Harvard's 21½. This is the lowest number of points by which any meet had been decided. The highest is held by Penn, [illegible] points in 1899.

Harvard has won thirteen of these championship meets, Yale nine, Penn eight, Cornell four, Columbia three and Princeton one.

Harvard has won 606 14-15 points, Yale 574 37-60, Penn 483½, Cornell 293¾, Princeton 296¾, Columbia 132 1-12, Michigan 133 2-3 and Syracuse 105¼. None of the others have won over a total of 100 points.

Here Are the Records of Today.

The present intercollegiate records are as follows

100 yards, 9 4-5 seconds, made by Wefers of Georgetown, Craig of Michigan and Patterson of Penn.

220 yards, 21 1-5 seconds, made by Wefers of Georgetown, Craig of Michigan and Lippincott of Penn.

440 yards, 48 seconds, by Reidpath, Syracuse.

Half-mile, 1 minute 53 4-5 seconds, made by Jones, Cornell.

Mile, 4 minutes 14 2-5 seconds, made by Jones, Cornell.

Two miles, 9 minutes 24 2-5 seconds, Withington, Harvard.

120-yard hurdle, intercollegiate record, 15 1-5 seconds, Shaw, Dartmouth.

220-yard hurdle, 23 3-5 seconds, Kraenzlein, Penn, and Wendell, Wesleyan.

Hammer, 164 feet 10 inches, De Witt, Princeton.

Shot, 48 feet 10¾ inches, Beatty, Columbia.

Pole vault, 13 feet 1 inch, Gardner, Yale.

Two Cups at Stake in Harvard Races

Two important university running championships will be decided at Harvard next Tuesday afternoon. The first will be the 220 yards run for the Lodge Cup. Rod Tower won the event last year, but this season is occupying a front seat on the probation wagon and consequently cannot try to repeat. Captain Bill Barron, Ned Foley and Eddie Teschner, the freshman captain, are among the better known athletes who will try to capture the silver mug.

The Wells Cup calls for a run of 440 yards. Bill Bingham won it last season and Bill Barron the season before. The race Tuesday will be for blood with Barron, Bingham, Capper, Biddle and Eric Stone all expectantly looking for a victory.

"Pooch" Donovan will act as referee of both runs.

Penn. Freshmen Beat Cornell Lads

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 23—The University of Pennsylvania freshmen defeated the Cornell University freshmen today in their annual track and field games on Franklin Field by the score of 64 to 62. Pease of Pennsylvania established a new mile record for freshmen, running the event in 4:30.

STIRRING FINISHES BY NEW ENGLAND STARS

Cook, a little Tech runner, made himself one of the big heroes of the meet, when he won the two-mile, after a classic struggle with Saltmarsh of Dartmouth and Preti of Maine. He used wonderful judgment and timed himself perfectly all the way and when it came to the last few hundred yards had enough kick left to shake off his pair of doughty rivals and break the worsted some fifteen yards to the good.

The mile run was also most satisfying, from the spectator's standpoint, as was the half. In the former event, which was the first final on the afternoon's list, Franz Marceau was expected to win, and start things moving rightly from a Green point of view. Like those of Hanover who followed, he performed up to snuff and earned the honor of taking his team's first five points by as clean cut performance as could be wished.

GREAT FINISH IN HALF.

Granger, another Harry Hillman protege, came out on top in the half, but not until Higgins of Holy Cross had given him the battle of his life and forced him to a finish that brought the entire crowd to its feet.

Braun, yet another Dartmouth—they were all Dartmouth—person of parts was billed to win for himself and his college a couple of hurdle races. The impressive way in which he took the 120 event caused the scorers to chalk his win up before he started over the low sticks. But very inadvertently, he stumbled and fell in a semi-final and had to be content to go 50-50 on his advance notices.

Work in the jumping events was somewhat marred by the manner in which the frisky breezes insisted on twisting poles and cross bars up, but the fact didn't hinder the serious-minded youths who braved the elements from chalking up some very creditable performances.

The 100-yard dash opened the afternoon's proceedings and saw all the favorites come through, Olson of Dartmouth winning the second heat, Rice of Maine the third and O'Hara of Tech the fourth.

Rice and O'Hara also won their semi-finals. The former Powder Point flyer equaled the meet record of ten seconds when he beat Olson to the tape in a gruelling finish.

MARCEAU LANDS MILE.

The honor of winning the first final of the day went to Dartmouth, when Franz Marceau led home a big field of milers in the fast time of 4m. 28s.

The race was a hard battle all the way. Benson of Tech forcing the Hanover star to show his best form to break the tape first. At the half Benson had opened up a 20-yard lead on Marceau, Thompson of Colby, Tucker of Dartmouth and Brown of Tech.

Led by Marceau the bunch went after the Tech flyer and caught him at the three-quarter mark. For fully two-thirds of the final lap the quartet sprinted around together. At that point Marceau made his final effort and pulled away, coming home about 15 yards before Thompson of Colby, who nosed out Benson at the tape by a desperate finish.

Dartmouth continued to pile points in the quarter. O'Connor won and Ronald Riley home second with him, after a ding dong battle all the way around the track.

Guething of Tech and Lee of Holy Cross made the going in the early part of the race, but their efforts killed them and neither was able to get in on the points.

Charley Rice showed that he was in beautiful form when the finals of the 100 were run off, winning in even by a couple of yards over O'Hara of Tech, who nosed out Llewlyn and Olson of Dartmouth by a scant couple of feet. The Maine youngster took the front at the gun and was never headed.

HURDLES EASILY BRAUN'S.

In the 120-yard hurdles Braun of Dartmouth had a regular pleasure jaunt and took the event as he pleased in 16 seconds. So had he been pushed he could have gone well under that time. Royal of Colby finished second by stalling off a desperate rush at the finish on the part of Hay of Williams.

The two-mile race, which went to Cook of Tech, was one of the best races of the meet. From start to finish it was a slashing fight, with the winner, Saltmarsh of Dartmouth, and Preti of Maine having it out.

As soon as the bunch had straightened out it was evident that all the racing would be between this trio. For the greater part of the entire race they swapped places, setting the pace and gradually pulled away from the rest of the bunch.

With a mile and a half gone Cook started to let out and, taking Saltmarsh with him gradually went from Preti. With the bell for the final lap, the Tech flyer started his sprint, but his Dartmouth rival refused to be shaken and for several hundred yards the pair had it out shoulder to shoulder.

Turning into the homestretch, however, Cook's superior stamina stood him in good stead and he tore down to the finish, going like a sprinter. Saltmarsh, who finished about fifteen yards to the bad, had about the same margin on Preti.

HALF GREAT RACE.

Another great race and another Dartmouth victory followed in the half, Granger landing the event after Higgins of Holy Cross had cut out a hot pace, for a time looking like a certain winner. The victor, however, had a lot up his sleeve and tore down the home stretch with a beautiful spurt that brought him in well to the fore.

Higgins ran himself out, and Reynolds of Colby, carried along by Granger's great jump, nosed into second place. The Holy Cross athlete took the lead at the gun in this race and turned the quarter in 5[illegible] seconds with a 10-yard advantage.

The Dartmouth star began his race, however, shortly afterwards, and though Higgins fought hard to stem him off, would not be denied and breezed past. The time, 1.58, considering the gale that buffeted the runners, was remarkable.

Dartmouth suffered a blow in the first semi-final heat of the 220 low hurdles, when Braun, who had captured the high stick event and seemed due to share with Rice the honor of being a double-event winner, stumbled and fell, when leading his field by a few city blocks.

ROYAL WINS HURDLES.

This gave Royal of Colby a chance to land a first, which he did after a hot scrap with Hudson of Trinity. The best Huff of Tech, who looked good with Braun out of the way, could do was get third.

Another chance to equal a record, and another runaway was all the 220 proved for the sorrel-topped Mr. Rice. In the furlong final he left the field at the mark, and galloped down the track with the abandon of a ball player who has propped a homer over the fence. His time, 22 seconds, equalled the meet record, as the 21 4-5 he hung yesterday in the trials was not allowed. With a good day he could easily have gone 3-5 of a second faster. O'Hara of Tech took a desperate fight for second from Llewellyn of Dartmouth, who was, in turn, a fraction of an inch ahead of his team-mate Olson.

The wind raised havoc with the jumpers and the officials had the wildest kind of a time trying to keep the cross bars on the pins. In the high Palmer of Maine copped out by taking advantage of calm spells and wriggling over 5 feet, 9 inches. Little of Dartmouth and Sullivan of Tech divided the second and third points between them by tying at 5.8¼, while three other athletes were an even two inches lower and thereby split up a single point.

VAULT EASY FOR BUCK.

Just as expected, Buck of Dartmouth was not pushed in the pole vault and stopped after clearing 11 feet 4 inches, which was just a third of a foot higher than Lawrason of Tech, McKenney of Bowdoin, or King of Williams could accomplish.

Nordell of Dartmouth surprised himself in the broad jump when he got a perfect lift and went out for 23 feet, which gave him the event without the slightest competition. Reed of Tech who made the place was a foot and a couple of inches to the bad.

Whitney in the shot, Bailey in the hammer and Bartlett with the discus all proved winners as their performances yesterday augured, the big Maine expert getting the only new record of the meet in addition to a first place.

YALE SEES CHANCE TO WIN THIS WEEK

New Haven Will Send 23 Men to the Intercollegiates—Counts on Second, Anyway.

NEW HAVEN, May 23.—Hope is higher at Yale for winning the intercollegiate track championship this year than at any time the past decade. Yale has not won the track title since 1903, but the Blue's victory over Harvard and Princeton in the dual meets the past month has disclosed the Yale team as the strongest and best balanced of any the Elis have possessed in ten years.

It is felt at Yale that the meet will lie between Cornell and the Yale team, each of which is likely to score from twenty-five to thirty points. A preliminary estimate tonight gave Cornell thirty points, divided about as follows:

Hundred-yard dash, 1 point; 220-yard dash, 1; 440-yard, 2; one mile, 5; two miles, 5; 220-yard hurdle, 2; broad jump, 6; high jump, 2; pole vault, 4; hammer throw, 2; total, 30.

WILL HAVE 23 ATHLETES.

Yale will take a team of only twenty-three athletes. Only one sprinter, Tommy Cornell, is included. He is a bare possibility for a place in either dash. Wilkie should score, probably in third place in the quarter mile, and Captain Brown should win the half mile.

Foucher is the only distance runner whose chances are even for scoring. He cannot be expected to do better than capture a fourth place in the mile.

Potter, on the basis of his consistent form all the season, should land second place in the low and fourth in the high hurdles. The complete return to form of Wesley Oler should assure him the high jump with a mark of about six feet one inch.

YALE WAS DISAPPOINTED.

The failure of the Yale entrants in the broad jump and pole vault at the dual meet with Harvard was a keen disappointment. Cook has done 23 feet several times this Spring, and both Carter and Johnstone have repeatedly cleared the bar 12 feet 3 inches in the pole event.

If they can return to form at the intercollegiates Yale should win the meet. Paul Loughridge has performed in the hammer throw consistently with a record of 155 feet this Spring, and on form should win this event. Ross and Harbison are tossing the shot 44 feet and should pick up fourth and fifth places in the event.

Yale's total on this basis should be about as follows:

100-yard dash, 1; 440-yard dash, 3; half-mile run, 5; mile run, 1; 120-yard hurdles, 2; 220-yard hurdles, 4; high jump, 5; broad jump, 3; pole vault, 2; hammer throw, 5; shot put, 3; total, 34.

Federal Invasion of Cleveland Looms Up

CLEVELAND, O., May 23.—The Ward brothers, owners of the Brooklyn Federal League team, have closed an option for the property at Euclid avenue and East Fifty-fifth street. The land has a frontage of 660 feet on Euclid avenue and extends north to Windsor avenue.

Harvard to Stop Cub Interviews

In an effort to curb the practice of getting interviews or statistics from men of prominence on sporting subjects, W. C. Brown, Jr., Chairman of the Committee on Publications of Harvard Student Council has written to those in authority in other University publications suggesting that the employment of candidates to get such interviews or statistics be discontinued.

Mr. Brown's campaign is made at the suggestion of the Council, and he recommends that some officer of the paper get the matter desired rather than the candidates.

Pres. Gilmore Fines Fed League Jumpers

BALTIMORE, May 23.—The Federal League today dealt out penalties to two contract jumpers, at a special meeting over which President Gilmore presided. Pitcher Frank Smith, who attempted to jump to Montreal, was fined $100 and suspended for forty days. Pitcher Allen, who also tried to jump to Montreal, was fined $25 and suspended for fifteen days.

YALE CREWS OFF FOR GALE'S FERRY

NEW HAVEN, May 23.—Permission has been given by the Yale faculty for the varsity and freshman rowing squads to leave here next Friday afternoon for their permanent training quarters at Gale's Ferry, six miles above New London.

According to the revised Yale calendar recitations close a week earlier than before. Till last year the crew squads never went to their training camps till the first or second week in June.

The varsity oarsmen will do little next week because of their hard race at Ithaca today, and the long trip necessary to reach there, but three weeks of rugged practice, twice daily, is promised them when they reach the Thames.

Before their departure the second eight, which rowed at the American Henley, at Philadelphia, last Saturday, will be disbanded and two fours organized, one of them to form the quartet which will race Harvard.

Captain Denegre is still in the second eight, and it is not likely that he will be found in the varsity four which rows Harvard.

He is still unable to master the stroke taught by Coach Guy Nickalls and it is not likely that he will regain his seat in the varsity eight this season.

It is unlikely that there will be any more changes in the Yale eight before its race with Harvard, although today's contest with the Cornell and Princeton, the first of the season for the Yale crew, disclosed one or two individual weaknesses in the Yale eight.

Never before since Yale-Harvard crew races were begun has an Eli eight gone to New London without a single member of the crew of the past year. Four—Snowden, Gore, Lippincott and Crocker—are still in college but have left the squad for various reasons.

MIDDLESEX LOSES TO EXETER CREW

The first crew races ever held at Exeter, a regatta with Middlesex on the Exeter River, resulted in a win by three lengths for Exeter in the eight-oared race and an unsatisfactory tie in the four-oared event.

The eight-oared race was rowed over a half-mile course and the four-oared races, of which there were to be three heats, over a quarter-mile course. The races were rowed between 2 and 4 o'clock on an ebb tide, the longer race against the tide and the shorter ones with it. Exeter and Middlesex each won a heat in the quarter-mile races and then Exeter, who outweighed Middlesex eight pounds to a man, romped away with the eight-oared race in a fine sprint at the finish by three lengths.

In the third and final quarter-mile race a motor boat got directly in the course of the two crews. Middlesex just missed colliding with the launch and both boats shipped considerable water. They continued to row, however, and Exeter crossed the finish line a half a length ahead of Middlesex. Coach Howe of Middlesex, who was also judge at the finish, refused to allow the race and would not allow his men to row another race, as Captain Quimby and Coach Burgess suggested. Summary:

Four-oared race—First race won by Exeter by [illegible] length. Time—1m. 26s.

"Nicotine Has Killed More People Than Bullets"

The above strong but true statement was recently made by Prof. Munyon, the man who discovered the medicinal virtues of Paw Paw and gave to the world the greatest stomach tonic and laxative known to science, Munyon's Paw Paw Pills. He has probably talked with more sick people and sold more medicine than any living man, so that his judgment has special value in everything pertaining to drugs. Other eminent authorities agrée with Prof. Munyon.

Our object in introducing the above testimonial is to assist us in our work on tobacco cigarettes.

Tobacco cigarette smoking is increasing at an alarming rate. Its victims are numbered by millions. Once the deadly Nicotine, which is found in all tobacco cigarettes, gets its grip on a fresh victim, he becomes a slave.

It undermines his health, it impairs his efficiency, it interferes with his progress, it wrecks his future. Insanity is not uncommon and death takes a yearly harvest of cigarette nicotine victims numbered by thousands.

Every father and mother who has a boy who smokes tobacco cigarettes should buy him a box of Smo-ko Tobaccoless Cigarettes. One injures, the other benefits. Nervous men should stop the use of tobacco and try the health giving Smo-ko. They will like them better. Every physician and every preacher should advocate the use of Smo-ko Tobaccoless Cigarettes to all who smoke. Every person who suffers with catarrh should let Smo-ko cure him.

Smo-ko Tobaccoless Cigarettes consist of antiseptic leaves, flowers and herbs. The warm, dry smoke inhaled through the mouth and made to pass through the nose brings immediate relief. A few puffs and good-bye colds.

The "stuffy" and clogged feeling in the nose, the rawness and the dropping in the throat; the hawking, the blowing and the sneezing disappear like magic.

Smo-ko is highly aromatic. It perfumes the breath. It fills the room with the fragrance and aroma of the Orient.

It is a delightful smoke for sick or well and corrects the desire for tobacco.

Sold by Riker-Jaynes stores and all other up-to-date druggists.

For a few days we will sell 10 cigarettes for 10c—regular price 25c.

Getting a Job at the Club—Howard and Howard, the Clever Comedians, Tell How It's Done

C p r ... by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

WILLIE—Say, I hear you're the steward of this club

GENE—Your ears ring true.

WILLIE—Well, I heard there's a fellow over here looking for a walley

GENE—A walley? You mean a valet

WILLIE—Oi, oi, what's the difference? A rose by any other nam would smell just like a rose

GENE—Have you your credentials with you?

WILLIE—Well, to tell the truth, my laundry didn't get back in time.

GENE—No, no. I mean your references. What could your last employer say about you?

WILLIE—Not a thing; he's deaf and dumb

GENE—How long have you been in Paris?

WILLIE—A year from next Tuesday it will be six months

GENE—What did you do before you became a valet?

WILLIE—I was an artist's model

GENE—Huh. What on earth did you ever pose for?

WILLIE—Easy money.

GENE—No, I mean what picture

WILLIE—Oh! September in the morning. But the water was cold I had to give it up.

GENE—What is your regular line of business?

WILLIE—Being blind and standing with a cup on the corner of an alley.

GENE—But can't the passers-by see through that?

WILLIE—No. It's a blind alley

GENE—Now, every morning you'll have to get up at six o'clock

WILLIE—I couldn't do that. I must always have my breakfast before I get up.

GENE—Then the next thing to do is to get his bath ready

WILLIE—What, every morning?

GENE—Abo-surely-lutely.

WILLIE—Even if it isn't Saturday night

GENE—Every morning

WILLIE—What's the matter with him, is he a maniac or something?

GENE—He's a neurasthenic

WILLIE—That may be a good religion, too

GENE—Do you know anything about neurasthenia

WILLIE—Sure. It's two stations above Yonkers

GENE—Can you keep a gent's clothes in shape?

WILLIE—It all depends on the kind of shape he's got

GENE—I mean, can you [illegible] a suit of clothes?

WILLIE—Sure. [illegible] I sponged it from my brother-in-law last week

GENE—He's also a great golf enthusiast. Of course you know what golf is?

WILLIE—Yep. Mountain billiards

GENE—I've wondered why most men seem to enjoy playing golf only after they're past sixty.

WILLIE—Because a man only chases a golf ball after he gets too old to chase anything else.

Our Garden Patch

Our Own Garden Dictionary.

C ... the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

(There is more or less information contained in our original and especially prepared garden dictionary, which is not to be found in any seed catalogue. In fact, many of the things told herein are not known or even suspected by Luther Burbank.)

ASPARAGUS—This spike of green stuff, which contains a half inch of soft nourishment and seven or eight inches of steel cable, is frequently called "asparagrass," but it is not as delectable as grass. If you are in a hurry for some, do not attempt to plant it, for if you plant it May 1, 1914, you will find it almost ready to eat May 1, 1914, providing some eighty-two kinds of bugs do not get it. The best asparagus is raised by planting about thirty cents on the counter of the produce dealer's store

BEANS—There are some forty varieties of beans, including the only sort really fit to eat—the Boston Baked. Early beans are so called because they come up early and provide food for the early worms which get a bird of a lunch from them. Pole beans are not necessarily planted by Polacks. Frequently you can grow twenty cents worth of pole beans on $3 worth of poles

BEETS—These blushing vegetables grow easily almost anywhere. This is probably because ten cents worth of seeds will plant a twenty-five-foot row of them. They are like many a human grouch—better when pickled

BRUSSELS SPROUTS—These are Tom Thumb cabbages. They look like cabbages, they smell like cabbages, but the fussy Postoffice Department won't allow us to tell right out what they taste like. They are called Brussels sprouts because they taste considerably like a Brussels carpet

CABBAGES—A sort of overgrown rose. To raise these, plant a hedge of them around your front lawn. When ripe pick a bunch and serve with corned beef. Seven or eight cabbages will furnish a dainty lunch for any invalid

CAULIFLOWER—Mark Twain said these were cabbages with a college education. They look more like a cluster of pickled tripe which the butcher's boy has rolled up to throw at the grocer's boy. They have a flavor something like unsalted excelsior, but are not as nourishing

CARROTS—These are the Titian blondes of the vegetable world. One bunch of carrots will do more to clarify and beautify the skin than seven dollars' worth of cold cream and other cosmetics. They begin at nothing at the south end and get to be as large as a sore thumb at the upper, or north end

CELERY—This crisp bit of subterranean hay needs a lot of banking. It needs a banker to hire some one to grow it for you. Celery is noted for its tendency to fill your teeth, or the spaces between them, with long shreds of what seems to be a No. 30 white thread or darning cotton. Three hunks of second-handed celery leaves tossed on a twenty-cent steak enhance its value—to the restaurateur—about 100 per cent.

CORN—Several grains of corn planted in a hill will shoot up into a cluster of corn stalks upon which there will grow three ears of corn. By the time they ought to be ripe they have been attacked by some vegetable wens which make them look like damaged dirigible balloons and they are worthless. Sometimes you can grow corn on the ear, so called because when eating it that is where much of it lands

CUCUMBERS—Plant seeds first of June, send for doctor first week in August. To avoid colic, cramps and convulsions, peel the cucumbers, cover with salt, pepper, oil and vinegar, then set aside and eat something else

EGG PLANT—The egg plant is so called because it resembles an egg about as much as a steam calliope resembles a harmonica. These grow to the size of a Willie-boy's ivory dome. They are a sort of deep second mourning color and when peeled and fried they taste like the cardboard that comes around a charlotte russe

KOHLRABI—The "Rabi" part [illegible] has nothing to do with the nationality of this vegetable, which is a sort of overgrown cabbage leaf. The leaves of this vegetable are excellent for porch awnings or substitutes for grass carpets for porches. Some people boil and eat them, but then, some people eat maple syrup on shad roe, so how can one judge by that?

LETTUCE—A sort of long green leaf to [illegible] only a few cents a bunch, but in order to make it fit to eat one must add about fifty cents worth of oil, vinegar, tomatoes and other dressing and frills

LEEK—A small white bulb called a leek because it leaks odor whenever eaten. To grow leeks, plant in April, wait 100 days, then pull them up. Worms won't bite them—they know better

MELONS—There are watermelons, muskmelons and cantaloupes. Watermelons should be opened and a quart of champagne poured in, then set on ice over night. This adds a flavor that nature somehow has not been able to duplicate. Muskmelons may also be planted if you have nothing else to do—then you may give them away, as, fortunately, you are not compelled to eat them. Cantaloupes will seldom grow in a little garden. They need wide acres of special soil and a cantaloupe trust to make them successful

ONIONS—For onions see Leeks, only more so

PEAS—Every amateur gardener is cursed with the ancient earliest green pea" vice. They plant peas anywhere from March to May and then falsify as to how early they had green peas out of their own garden. Once a man who said he had peas from his own garden on June 1, told the truth—he tossed a can of peas out there, then went out and brought it in

PARSNIPS—A celebrated vegetable about the color of old ivory, but less nourishing. One may say anything while growing these, as it is well known that kind words will not butter them

PUMPKINS—A dainty little vegetable. It grows about the size of a college graduate's head, but the similarity ceases there, inasmuch as there is something in a pumpkin. When properly grown and turned into pies they have strawberries and cream, American Beauty roses and every other fruit, vegetable and flower looking like a piece of common brick. Do not plant nearer than an inch apart.

POTATO—This plebeian vegetable flourishes with vivid green foliage until just before the potatoes are ready to be dug, when it furnishes a picnic to an army of soft red bugs. To plant potatoes cut them up, one eye to a chunk, and place in hills. If they mature you may use the hoe as a hook, thus securing Nature's own hooks and eyes

RADISH—A delightful little bright red vegetable which grows to maturity in a few weeks. Dabbed in a bit of salt one may, after eating a few, remember them for at least a week

SQUASH—Less polished on the exterior; otherwise see "Pumpkin."

SWISS CHARD—A long, pale-green leaf which makes excellent greens. If boiled sufficiently the insects which cling to it will be quite "hors du combat."

TURNIPS—Hard, round, white vegetables which taste something like a white china door knob, although not quite as succulent. Take a lot of room in the garden, which is the highest praise that can be accorded to them.

TOMATOES—The vines upon which tomatoes grow furnish homes for large green worms about the size of a Manila cigar. These worms have yellow horns and an ugly disposition. The tomatoes themselves are cherry red when purchased at the corner store. The home-grown sort are generally a dark green by the time the frost comes.

Mirandy on Romantic Lovemaking

By DOROTHY DIX.

Published by Permission from the May Issue of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE.

Copyright, 1914, by Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

"WELL, Sis Mirandy," pr[illegible] Sis Hannah Jane to me [illegible] we was a-confabulatin togedder [illegible] udder day, "I declar' to gracious, I don't know [illegible] women is comin' to. Dey [illegible] progressin' [illegible] an' so fur, dat hit looks lak to me [illegible] dat dey's progressin' backwards.

Fust dey wants de vote. Den dey wants to wear de breeches, an', bless goodness, ef dey ain't got whut looks lak one leg of de pants on 'em, an' is a-flirtin' hit aroun' on de streets, an' callin' hit a skirt. An' now I reads a piece in de paper dat says dat de women in Sweden are demandin' to have de law give 'em de right to pop de question to a man, an' ax him to marry 'em, becaze dey say dat when a man proposes he looks so [illegible] an' awkward an' meachin."

"Huh!" 'sclaims Sis Aminty, what is a ole maid dat's been a-settin' on de anxious seat for de las' fifteen year, "so fur as I can see, hit's de quantity an' not de quality of proproposals dat needs improvin'."

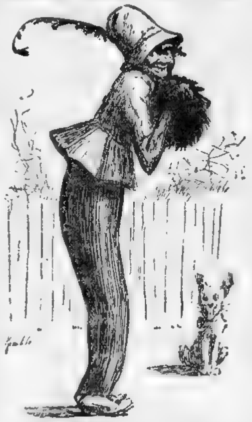
"Of cou'se, of cou'se. Dat's de true word dat you has spoke, Sis Mirandy," agrees Sis Hannah Jane. "Still, dere ain't any woman

"Of cou'se, of cou'se. Dat's de true word in de bottom of her soul to have some man make love to her des lak dey does hit in books an' on de stage; an' hit sho am discouragin', after you has done wuked lak a dray horse to drag a man up to de proposin'-p'int, to have him give a gulp or two, lak his Adam's apple was tryin' to choke him, an' den for him to ax you to marry him lak he was axin' you to pass de butter.

"You sho am talkin' now, Sis Hannah Jane," says I. "Ev'ry time a man pops de question to a woman she busts into tears. De man thinks dat she's cryin' wid joy becaze he's done come across at las' an' she's got such a good thing as him; but whut she's a-weepin' over is de way he done bungled things an' knocked de socks off'n all de romance. Ever sence she's been a little gal she's been a-thinkin' 'bout some man comin' along an' fallin' in love wid her, an' axin' for her hand in marriage in high-falutin language dat she'll be proud to remember an' brag 'bout to de longest day she lives. An' when de thing does happen, hit's des as onnery an' commonplace as buyin' a peck of potatoes.

"She's thought dat de man would pour out a lot of love talk dat jes' burned an' sizzled, an' den dat he would clutch her to his manly [illegible]om in a way dat would loosen her black [illegible], an' dat he would swear dat all de powers [illegible] darkness could not tear her away from [illegible]. Dat's whut she's been a-lookin' forward [illegible] hearin'; an' whut he says is, dat he's done found a nice two room flat wid stationary washtubs an' a gas stove an' dat he'll stand



"Fust dey wants de vote. Den dey wants to wear de breeches, an', bless goodness, ef dey ain't got whut looks like one leg of de pants on 'em an' is a-flirtin' hit aroun' on de streets, an' callin' hit a skirt."

[illegible] of hit ef she wants to tie up wid [illegible]

Dat's de reason de movies gits all my [illegible] Sis Aramimty. "I goes to see [illegible] on de stage as hit should be [illegible] knows I'll never see hit done dat [illegible]

[illegible] ays Sis Hannah Jane, wid a faraway look in her eye, "whut it is dat makes a man turn pale aroun' de gills, an' tremble an' stutter an' fall over his own feet when he goes to ax a woman to marry him."

"Huh," says Ike, who had been a-listenin' to us, "hit's becaze he knows dat he is a-gettin' hisself into trouble, an' he's a-wrestlin' wid his guardeen angel dat's makin' one las' effort to hold him back an' save him. Believe me, Sis Hannah Jane, dere's many a man done wish dat when he started to pop de question his tongue had done stuck to de roof of his mouth so he never could have got hit down agin.

"I ain't a-sayin' dat a man don't look lak a human shrimp when he pops de question, becaze he does; an' feels lak one, only not so intelligent; but love-makin' ain't no business for a able-bodied man to be engaged in, an' you tak hit from me dat any man whut can make love widout lookin' an' actin' as shamed as a sheep-killin' dog, is done had too much experience. He done said dat thing over to so many women dat he's done learned hit by heart, an' when you gits one of dese heah proposals tied up wid a blue ribbon, you'd better keep yo' eye on hit, 'caze hit's mighty apt to git away from you.

"Mo'over," goes on Ike, "ef de women folks thinks dat dey can make love better dan de men does, let 'em go to hit, says I. As for me, I ain't no-wise opposed to a sweet young thing wid a straight-front figger an' soulful eyes a-leadin' me out into de moonlight, an' a-holdin' my han', an' tellin' me how noble an' gran' an' handsome I is, an' how her heart begins to flop aroun' in her bosom de minnit she sets eyes on me. An' ef she wants to quote any poetry to me, I'se ready an' willin' to listen as long as she nestles my han' in her little flapper an' spiels along. Nuther is I got any objections to her kneelin' at my feet, ef she wants to do hit, dough how any young female is gwine to do de kneelin' act in dese heah snake-skirts gits me."

"De hussy!" 'sclaims I. "Des let me ketch any gal a-makin' love to you, an' dere she is gwine to be wuk for de horspital!"

"Oh, bein' a married man, I was des speakin' paragorically, ole lady," 'spons Ike. "Cou'se I wouldn't encourage any young woman to make love to me, onless she was des a-practisin' up de best way to pop de question to some odder man. Nuther is I a-sayin' dat women wouldn't improve de output of love talk ef dey did de proposin', becaze women is dat long on talk, anyway, dat ef one of 'em set her mind on marryin' a man, she'd argify him into doin' hit, whedder he wanted to or not. He'd say yes des to shut her up."

"Sis Mirandy," says Sis Hannah Jane, "does you believe dat ef women did de proposin' dey'd pop de question mo' poeticaller dan men does?"

"I don't know 'bout dat, Sis Hannah Jane," I 'spons. "Dey might not propose better dan men, but dey'd do hit oftener."

Louise Kelley Tells These in the "Midnight Girl"

MEMBERS of the Brown family were seated around the dinner table one evening, and discussion ranged from the Brazilian maxixe to straw hats. Mrs. Brown had accepted an invitation to a bridge party for the next afternoon, a letter had been received announcing the fact that the Brown bungalow at a nearby Summer resort had been painted and fixed up for the season, and Tommy, the youngest of the family, was promised a booklet of Mexican photographs.

Finally, Mr. Brown, who had been forced to hold his tongue during all the buzz and hubub of conversation, had a chance to make a remark.

"Well," he began, "I received a number of sealed proposals at my office today"——

"Oh, father!" interrupted his eldest daughter, "were any of them for me?"

A WELL-KNOWN downtown lawyer has twenty or thirty callers during the course of his office hours each day, and necessarily employs an office boy. One day this hard-working barrister happened to be down on Wall street conferring with a broker, when it became necessary for him to get in touch over the 'phone with his stenographer.

So he called his office. The office boy, as lord of all he surveyed, curtly answered, "Whatcha want?"

"I'd like to speak with Miss Smith."

"Who?"

"Miss Smith—S-m-i-t-h!"

"I can't understand you. Talk louder."

After five minutes of impertinent answers from the office boy and no satisfaction whatever, the lawyer, exasperated, hung up the receiver with a loud bang.

"If I had an office boy like that I'd fire him on the instant," said the broker.

"How can I?" exclaimed the attorney. "He can't understand anything I say!"

A CERTAIN Harvard professor had planned a trip from Cambridge to Buffalo, where he intended to spend his Summer vacation. After securing his railroad ticket and making a Pullman reservation, he consulted a timetable and learned, much to his displeasure, that the train he had selected was the slowest on the schedule, and that it stopped at every water tank and crossing.

He was lamenting the fact to one of his friends. "Why, this train takes twice as long as any other. It will be a most nerve-racking journey!"

"Yes," came a reply of consolation, "but think of all the wonderful scenery you will have the advantage of seeing!"

No Change.

"BEFORE she was married she was constantly on the lookout for a husband."

"Well?"

"And since she got one she is still constantly on the lookout for him."

Just Jokes

What Aldrich Missed.

"DO you think that we should have a more elastic currency?" asked the Old Fogy.

"It is elastic enough," replied the Grouch. "Why don't they make it more ahesive?"

War Victim.

"MA'M, can you do somethin' for a sufferer in the war in the Balkans?"

"In what manner did you suffer?"

"I was a proofreader on a daily paper."

Just to Start Them.

HE—What are you going to give Kitty and Jack for a wedding present?

She—Oh, I guess I'll send Kitty the bunch of letters Jack wrote me when we were engaged.

Getting Even.

"WE are somewhat musical, and now the family next door is having the daughter take singing lessons."

"Emulation, eh?"

"Looks more like revenge."

Finished Product.

"BUNSBY claims to be a man of the world."

"Yes."

"Has he traveled much?"

"No; but he once lived in New York for three months."

Good for the Digestion

Reason for His Grouch.

"WHAT'S the matter, Henpeck, you look as if you had not slept last night?"

"Oh, I slept grandly; but I awoke too soon. I had a splendid dream, and I had my fist drawn back to biff Maria on the nose and then I awoke. I shall never get another such opportunity."

Cupid's Mark.

Surely it's a funny thing that when Cupid hits his mark he generally Mrs. it.

The Reason.

"I JUST can't seem to keep a dining-room girl!"

"I have often wondered why you never can keep any help. I never have any such trouble."

"I know, but my husband just won't flirt with them."

He Followed His Orders

"HEY," yelled the carpenter wrathfully at his new assistant, "didn't I tell you to notice when the glue boiled over?"

"Yes, sir, and I did," responded the youth; "it was exactly quarter past ten."

Very Short.

"SOMEHOW you seem to have grown shorter instead of taller, since I last saw you."

"Well, I've married and settled down."

Same Thing.

"YOU are a regular miser!" exclaimed Mrs. Snooper, when her husband refused to give her five dollars she asked for.

"No; not a miser," replied Snooper, "merely an economizer."

A Unique Uniform.

A BAND had been formed at a Western Normal School, and as is frequent in such cases, there was not enough money at first for complete uniforms. However, the following notice in the school paper created quite a sensation:

"The Normal School band uniforms will consist of a cap and coat at first, with the probable addition of trousers at a later date."

Needless Noise.

BOY—Say, mother, will you speak to that Sammy?

Mother—What's he doin' now?

Boy—Well, every time I hit him on de head wid dis hammer he hollers.

Laughs in the News

MARQUIS DE LAVRADO, private secretary of ex-King Manuel, declares the young has-been sovereign is happy.

Then the report of his recent marriage was untrue?

A burglar in Spokane, Washington, partly robbed a house, then left in disgust after writing a note as follows: "Your kids make too much noise in the night."

If it wasn't for the Spokane date line on that news item many of us would believe he referred to our next-door neighbor.

A lecturer at the London Ethnological Society declared that the styles of today are those of 3500 B. C.

He may be a good lecturer, but he's a bit [illegible] and all that sort of thing on ethnology, for at that time the women were wearing several garments.

London chemists have prepared siphons of [illegible] radium, a sort of radio-active sparkling water.

Using this as a base for highballs radium [illegible] balls—how one could get lit up!

Captain Prager of the Vaterland has reported meeting a school of hundreds of mammoth whales, many of them swimming close to the ship and peeping through the portholes into the ladies' cabins.

Then they probably got together and "spouted" about what they saw.

A New York suffragist said most Wall Street men were too timid to attend a suffrage meeting.

They are not afraid of bulls and bears, but when it comes to hens—

They are talking of getting up a regiment of actors in case of more serious trouble with Mexico.

And when they met the enemy all they would have to do would be to buttonhole them and begin with such stuff as, "I was a scream in Kokomo," or "Frohman cabled me yesterday," or "There isn't a square critic in the world," or "You should have seen me knock 'em when I played lead in——"

By that time the enemy would have beaten an ignominious retreat.

Some of those English militants donned tights the other day to swim out and cut boat moorings.

If the leaders use discretion as to who wears them they may at last be sure of getting in the public eye.

A party of young ladies, suffragettes, raided the Prince of Wales' rooms at Oxford recently.

A father in Berlin, Wis., is offering a thousand dollars to any surgeon who will separate the fingers on his baby son's right hand. They are attached with a web.

Why have those fingers separated? Think what a successful waiter he would make in New York when he grew up, with a mitt like that for tips.

Alexander Carlisle of London, builder of the Olympic, declares the limit has been reached with the Vaterland.

They said that of the first Cunarder, of the Great Eastern, and even of the Ark.

The National Cloak and Skirt Manufacturers' Association has decreed that the newest style will be shorter skirts, because they are more becoming.

However, that all depends.

Dr. Sun is planning another Chinese revolt.

That sun won't stay "set."

A Gibson (La.) couple ran two miles to get married.

If this turns out like the majority of marriages, they'll sprint a thousand miles to get unmarried some fine day.

Now some of our universities are after brains rather than brawn. A while ago they thought of introducing religion.

They are certainly after novelties.

A woman in Baltimore had a piece of skin taken from her elbow and made into an eyelid for herself.

Every time she hits her funnybone will she wink? Or every time she winks will it tickle her funnybone?

A dear, kind lady recently write to a New York paper declaring that forcible feding may be performed without difficulty and be quite humane if carried out as they do in asylums, "by putting prisoners in a straitjacket and administering the food by means of a tube through the nostrils."

It may be humane, but how about a meal of potato ships, dry toast, lamb chops, pickles, liverwurst, et cetera?

Dr. Barlow, at a meeting of a woman's society in Philadelphia, said: "I have great praise for the sane feminist."

Admitting, as it were, that there is another sort.

Dr. Cook believes Roosevelt found that river.

Poor Roosevelt is certainly getting knocked.

A New Jersey farmer is responsible for the statement that a big blacksnake attacked him with an axe, coling about the implement, or weapon, and striking at him.

The Jersey lightning season is well advanced in some sections, it seems.

Lieutenant Fred Quackenbush of the Detroit police department says there's no such thing as a black eye.

What do the Detroit toughs do—bite?

A New York lawyer, counsel for a man who is fighting to have his wifes' alimony reduced, declared the trouble with the couple was lack of humor.

Did this lawyer expect to find anything humorous in matrimony?

Report from Paris says Monte Carlo had a big year.

Vol. III. Boston, Sunday, May 24, 1914. No. 24.

In Darkest Brazil

A Full Account of Travels, Dangers, Explorations, Discoveries and Hair-raising Feats in the Wildest Jungle on the Surface of the Globe.

WELL, we hoofed it through the darkest jungles of Brazil, and to prove it we brought back a bottle of water from a river we discovered.

The river is 10,000 miles long. It flows up hill so fast that it creates dangerous rapids as it shoots over the crest of the ranges. The river is full of man-eating fish, which bore holes through the bottoms of the steel boats and snap off the sailors' toes. From this cause many of the river-men suffer from ptofish poisoning.

As the river runs up-hill, it is mighty hard work propelling a boat down-stream. The best way, we found, was to lift the boat clear out of the river, when it would naturally fall down hill with terrific speed.

The alligators, which compose the banks of the stream, are friendly animals and welcome strangers to their midst.

Farther inland ranges the proud jaguar, an animal which has bigger spots on it than a leopard has, but of course hasn't room for quite so many. If the jaguar's spots were much bigger, it would be all one big spot and then, of course, it wouldn't be spotted at all. How strange are the ways of nature.

The principal products of the jungles through which we sawed our way with a safety razor are bugs and nuts. From this you will see that our voyage must have been lively, since both bugs and nuts are allowed to roam freely through the jungle, shouting their weird cries. The nuts aren't such bad fellows, at that, if you can coax them to come out of their shells. Most of them have nothing to do but rubber, and this accounts for Brazil's great output of this material.

As soon as an expedition can be organized, the newly discovered river will be cut up into lengths and brought to this country, where it will be used in irrigation work in Arizona.

A Few Hints for the Summer

To avoid tiring yourself at business during the warm weather, chuck up your business.

Ice will last longer if kept packed in snow.

It will improve your driving if you swat flies with a golf club.

Buttermilk is not given by butterflies.

Some persons will not beat eggs because they are opposed to corporal punishment.

August is usually the warmest month of the year, although you can't make an Eskimo believe it.

September is so called because that is the name of the month.

The only tips some people take are asparagus tips.

Did You Know That—

An easy way to make a lettuce and tomato salad is to mix up lettuce and tomatoes?

One of the best ways to get into condition gradually is to spend the afternoons chasing snails out of the gardens?

If this exercise is too severe at first, you should put in a few days watching the grass grow?

You should never indulge in unseemly scrambling? Look what happens to scrambled eggs.

The election is over?

Art is long, but life is fleeting?

The above dope makes it right for us to cut out the art stuff?

There are several ways of peeling potatoes, but the simplest is to pare the skin off them.

Porto Rico is so called because that is the name of the island.

It's a long life that has no water wagon?

Mutterzolb and Son--By D. Darby Aaronson

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

"MILTON," said Mutterzolb, "I'll give you three guessings and I bet you'll never guess that I wuz down to Yutkey Flopp's bookstore on the Bowery. And talk about a lot books? Why, he's got a regular Carnigger Library. And you ought to see what's going on in that place.

"First, a feller came in and asked him for a book on magic, he wants to learn how to be a magikan. But, believe me, the best magikan wuz Yutkey, who turned a small, little dirty book into a dollar.

"Then a woman came in and asked him for a good cook book. She said that her husband will get a divorce from her if she don't learn how to cook. Believe me, if she wuz my wife it wouldn't be so much for the cooking I would get a divorce as for the two dollars she throwed away on that book.

"Another feller came in and asked him for a book how to become rich, and when Yutkey went to get the book the feller said he ain't got no money to buy it now, but will buy it when he has, so Yutkey told him that he'll save him that money and tell him how to get rich mitout the book. So the feller asked him how, and you ought to see the smart answer Yutkey gave him. He told him that the best way for him to get rich is when he gets born over again he should make sure that it's in the John D. Rockefeller family, and we had a good laugh over this. And the way I wuz laughing I bet you people would never think that I just had a big order cancelled.

"Then a crazy fool comes in there, which is a bookstore, and asks Yutkey if he's got a collar button; so Yutkey answered him, 'Yes, on my shirt.' Then we had another good laugh. That Yutkey is a great fun maker. I remember yet in the old country how he used to make me laugh like anything. Well, in them days we didn't have no creditors pushing bills in our faces.

"Then a boy came in and told Yutkey he's wanted on the telephone in the druggist store on the corner, so he asked me to mind the store till he comes back, and he wuzn't out from the store a second when a feller comes in who looks more dead as alive, and asks me for a book how to be strong, so I took pity on him and told him he should buy himself better a good piece of steak instead of the book and he'll get strong much quicker. Don't you think that loafer got mad on me yet for giving him that good advice?

"Then a crazy feller came in and said that he must have the life from Napolonion and don't care how much it costs. I thought to myself, Napolonion's life he can't have no more, because he's already a long time dead, but I wuz afraid he could do me a lot harm. And he wouldn't go out at all. He commenced to look around on books, and I wuz standing there like on pins and needles.

"Then he said a second time he wanted the life of Napolonion, but I couldn't open my mouth to answer him. Never before did I want to see Yutkey so much as I did then; and what saved me and maybe my [illegible] wuz a good idea what came in my head. I took quick a handful of cigars from a box what Yutkey had standing there, gave them to him, and mit a nice talk, I got him out.

"Then a woman came in and asked me for a book how to become beautiful. And you ought to see the face on that woman. I don't like to make fun from anybody, but believe me, she had a face on her just like if she would be a brother to a Rhinemoscowitz. I tell you that all the books in the world couldn't help her. And I wuz thinking only what could I answer her, but just then Yutkey came in, and I could hardly keep myself back from laughing when I told him in his ear what she wants.

"And don't you think that clever Yutkey pulls out a couple books for her what he said wuz by Lillian Yussel, and books what wuz worth maybe the highest mit the paper and all twelve cents, he charged her three dollars. When I saw that I thought I wouldn't mind being in that book business myself.

"A young Irish feller by the name Patky, who Yutkey knows, came in and said he wants a book to learn how to be a detective, and Yutkey was telling me what a nice, honest feller that Patky is, so I thought to myself that he could never be a detective, but I wuz wrong, because he right away catched Yutkey giving him a bad half a dollar change.

"Then it got very busy. Lots people came in and asked for books mit names what only a college professor could understand. One feller wanted Jakespeare's Rummeo and Julius, another feller asked for Marks Anthony and Cleopotroast. Then a feller wanted a set Encyclopeanuts Britishanarchist. I tell you that you got to give your father credit for remembering such a big names for the little education what I had.

"Then who you think comes in but my bookkeeper. He didn't see me; I wuz in the back taking a drink water. I heard him asking Yutkey for a book how to take care of an automobile. Milton, I want you right away the first thing in the morning to examine the books. I would go even now if the building wuzn't locked.

"Go get me right away a headache powder, but don't get it in that goneff Hishberg's Drug Store, go better on the next block to that new druggist. I saw a sign there that they're giving away free samples Bummer Seltzer, and hurry a little, please, because I feel terrible."

"The new drug store is closed," replied Milton, looking out of the window. "Will I go to Hirshberg's and get it?"

"Never mind," answered Mutterzolb, "I am feeling a little better already."

Loney Haskell On Mexico

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

LADIES AND SUBSTITUTES: In order to preserve peace, I salute you first and insult you afterwards. With your permission, I will read you the latest bulletin regarding the situation in Mexico. Message just received states the Mexican farmers refuse to plant any more peas for fear the American soldiers will shell them.

Huerta is behaving like an old woman. Well, if he wants to be an old woman nothing will hurt her. Personally, I am in favor of pitting Boston Beans against Mexican Beans, with Bean-shooters as weapons, and what Boston can't, Mexi-can. If there should really be a war, the Americans could pray and our prayers would be answered. You say Mexicans could also pray. Very true, but who in San Juan Hill would understand them?

First thing we did was to take Vera Cruz. That is a new drink on me. Some people think Secretary Daniels' order abolishing drinking in the navy started the war, and yet Wilson is the real stimulant. Mexico loves to fight. They fight all the time—a privilege that belongs to the Irish. I am willing to bet that the 9th Regiment could clean up the entire Mexican army, using bayonets charged with soap and water.

This war should be stopped if only for the reason of squelching all the song writers who are perpetrating war songs on the public, such as "Off to Mexico We Must Go," "On the Way to Mexico," "The Greasers We Will Show," "That We Have Got the Dough." No one wants to go to Mexico; we would rather go to Revere Beach.

I believe we are justified in demanding any nation to properly respect our flag, but is Mexico a nation or a disease? They have internal troubles, why not send down a bunch of doctors and prescribe for them, say, poison? If the President wishes to end the war quickly, I would suggest enlisting an army of those swell restaurant proprietors and give them the command to charge. They would charge so heavily that the war would be over in a week.

It Always Pays to Have a "Dense" Valet

One of the amusing scenes in "Adele," now playing at the Tremont, is between the young Baron De Chantilly and his valet, Jacques. The Baron, in great financial distress, following a career of high living, decides upon suicide. He has just entertained a party of ladies in his apartments and has sent them away in order to take his own life.

Then follows this dialogue between the Baron and Jacques.

CHARLES (bidding girls good-bye)—Au revoir. (Laughs. Jacques, who has held door open for ladies, returns to Charles.) Jacques, circumstances may lend humor even to so trite a remark as "Au revoir." (Laughs slightly and grimly.)

JACQUES (gradually down to centre)—Indeed, sir! I would not have suspected [illegible]

CHARLES (near mantle)—The point of the joke lies in the fact that I shall NEVER see them again.

JACQUES—Never is a TERRIBLE length of time, sir.

JACQUES—I don't understand.

CHARLES—It is the density of your intelligence which makes you an ideal valet.

JACQUES—I put it on with my livery, sir—anything else?

CHARLES—Yes, fetch me my pistols.

JACQUES (embarrassed)—Your pistols!

CHARLES—Precisely! I NEED them. I wish to blow my brains out. (Rises.)

JACQUES (quickly, aghast)—Mon Dieu! No!

CHARLES (bus. with cigarette)—I am perfectly serious, Jacques. I have a fancy to commit suicide. (With light and airy manner.)

JACQUES (horrified)—Sui—my knees are stammering! (Almost collapsing.)

CHARLES (helps Jacques to settee and X at back centre)—Take a seat, my good Jacques. You'll feel better when you're used to the idea.

CHARLES—Since one doesn't live to REALIZE it, THAT'S no objection.

JACQUES (rises)—Pardon me, sir, but are you—er—financially embarrassed?

CHARLES — Financially embarrassed? (Laughs.) Is that what gentlemen are when they're broke?

JACQUES—Yes, sir.

CHARLES—Then I am! Broke—shattered—pulverized! (Walks up and down.)

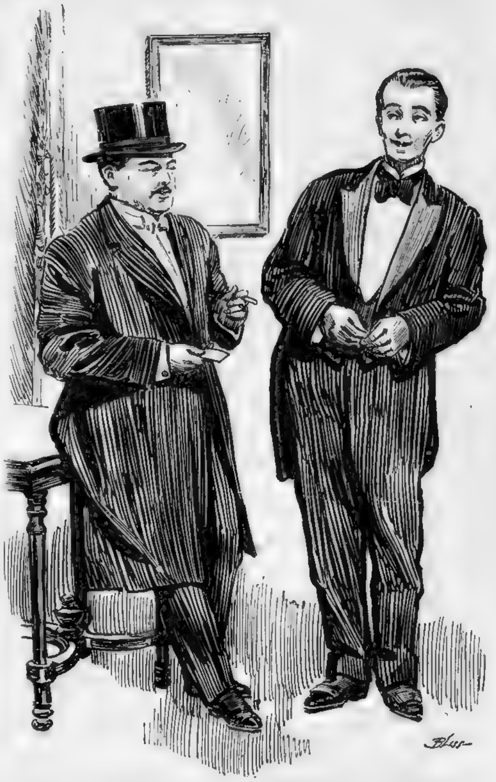
JACQUES (after awkward pause)—Would you honor me by accepting a loan from ME, sir?

CHARLES (amusingly surprised)—From you! My good Jacques—five or ten francs are of no use to ME.

JACQUES—No, sir, but FIFTY thousand——

CHARLES—Fifty thousand! (Sits on settee.)

JACQUES (modestly)—My savings.



The baron, whose ambition was to commit suicide, and the valet, the density of whose intelligence made him gather in 75,000 francs.

CHARLES (astounded, looks from newspaper at Jacques)—YOU have—saved—money out of your WAGES?

JACQUES—It isn't so much what I've saved, sir, as what I have—er—acquired. (Coughs with meaning.)

CHARLES—Acquired? Put that in the [illegible] financially embarrassed'!

JACQUES (laughs, a seasick laugh)—You [illegible] everything, so

CHARLES—Yes, even for the fifty thousand [illegible] amassed at my expense.

JACQUES—To be exact, sir—75,000!

CHARLES—Mon du diable! How DID you manage it?

JACQUES—Little drops of water.

CHARLES (adding)—Tiny grains of sand!

JACQUES—A cigar here; a cigar there; occasionally a box—or boxes——

CHARLES (good naturedly surprised)—Well——

JACQUES (quickly, but politely, interrupting)—I never SMOKED them, sir. Never! I wouldn't SO far forget my station in life. I SOLD them.

CHARLES—Seventy-five thousand francs worth of cigars! (Astounded.) Impossible!

JACQUES—Yes, sir, but—at times I turned my attention to your wines. You know, you drink nothing but THE BEST.

CHARLES (half laughing)—Evidently being a connoisseur has its drawbacks. (Inspiration, change of manner.) Did you ever go through my pockets?

JACQUES—Only the trouser pockets. Six times a week, never on Sunday. I ALWAYS respect the Sabbath.

CHARLES—Jacques! You have the makings of a successful company promoter!

JACQUES (quickly and insistently)—Then you'll accept the loan of fifty thousand—at six per cent., sir?

CHARLES—No! I'm very much obliged to you, my HONEST Jacques, but fifty thousand—even seventy-five thousand—are to me as a drop in the ocean.

JACQUES (pensively shaking his head)—You make me feel, sir, as though I had neglected opportunities.

CHARLES—No man could "DO" more than you have done. (Laughs heartily at his own jest.) (Jacques bows.) And now—the pistols. (Rises.)

JACQUES—Oh, sir! That's such a noisy method. Anything but pistols, sir. (With emotion.)

CHARLES—Your devotion touches me, but cannot alter my determination.

JACQUES (blurts it out at last)—It isn't that so much, sir—but—I—I—I've PAWNED them.

CHARLES (laughingly spoken)—Sacre Mont du Piete! It's a pretty thing when a gentleman can't blow his brains out while he's in the mood.

JACQUES—I will REDEEM the pistols, sir; at my own expense.

CHARLES—It's the LEAST you can do. Jacques! When I am no more—DON'T hide your light under a bushel—go in for—politics.

The convenient death of a rich uncle and the acquisition of his fortune is the final argument that prevents the Baron from carrying out his determination to remove himself—he lives happily to the end of the play.

Nursing a Canary--A. E. Hayward

By

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

EDITOR City Life Section—

Dear Sir—We have a canary. Tush, says you, what is that between friends? We all sow a few wild oats now and then, because most everybody has or has had a canary. Cheer up, says you, and lead a better life. Society is ready with a helping hand to those who truly repent their evil ways and——

But this is our first offence, says I. Listen.

Friend wife and I thought a canary would be a nice thing to have about the house, for they are hardly any care and sing almost continuously. I had visions of an extra companion perched on the edge of my soup plate at dinner, perhaps running up and down the asparagus or playing leap frog over the baked potatoes. In other words, if we got a canary I was going to train it to do stunts, you bet!

Wife, who is interested in music, was going to teach it a perfect scale, and we might even have entertained the hope that some day it would learn to play the zither—I dunno! Anyhow, I brought Algernon home one afternoon.

Yes, I know that according to all precedent it should be "Dickie," but I was firm for something above the common level, for we determined to bring the little fellow up in a refined atmosphere.

Along with Algernon, whom I could have put in my watch pocket, came one brass cage with Swiss chateau effect, ditto cigar box full of imported, inspected pasteurized double disinfected gravel, a paper bag full of seed, and a bottle of powder guaranteed to make a bird with the heaves or a gumboil sing as if he just got a check from a rich uncle.

Wife had just about become convinced that Algernon had mastered the first three notes of the "Jewel Song" from Faust, and I had let him fly about the room several times, when the little sucker rolled himself up like a ball of yellow yarn and moped. If the ladies' auxiliary had been holding their weekly sewing circle just then I am certain Algernon would have been knitted into a fancy necktie of something by mistake.

Great consternation! I grabbed the telephone. Operator must have caught the quiver of anxiety in my voice for, though it was Sunday, I got a quick connection with the man who currycombs the birds at a local pet shop. Have you any whiskey in the house, said he. I was about to rejoin that this was no time for levity and that I was not running a speak easy, when he came across.

He said feed it, oh, say ten drops to a half pint in its drinking water and inferred that if the bird had not been a heavy drinker in its youth this would act as a stimulant until morning. Then, he said, I could come down and get a bottle of their reliable dope for the small sum of twenty-five cents. Also, he went on, all their products were perfectly reliable. Would I like a nice sponge holder for birdie's bath, or one of the cute tooth brushes they were putting out now.

But I slammed down the receiver and in hesitating tones imparted to friend wife the news that we would have to tempt her darling with demon rum. I could see her eyes moisten as she foresaw the nights of anxiety when Algernon would be brought home from the club—however he got his whiskey.

He brightened up under its influence and next morning he really sang again. It is my recollection that he sang "Good Night, Ladies," "The Old Oaken Bucket," "Auld Lang Syne"—in fact all those rollicking airs, a trifle hoarse maybe, but getting it across nevertheless. Then he suddenly closed up like a clam again and began to wheeze like a shifting engine trying to negotiate a one foot grade.

We could stand the suspense no longer. With cold sweat streaming from my brow I rushed to the villain who sold me the bird.

Just a cold, said he. It needs a general toning up. Get a barrel of castor oil, pull out the bung and hold it to the canary's bill. Red pepper is another good thing, continued the heartless brute. Put a little in his morning cup of coffee and mix some with the butter on his toast. He laughed coarsely. He might have suggested that I walk Algernon round the block every morning, get him a pair of light dumbbells, a rowing machine and perhaps vary the programme by an occasional horseback ride in the park.

Making a memorandum of the advice I rushed forth and, intent on obtaining all the information possible, attacked a young lady in charge of the canary counter in a department store.

The young lady looked significantly at a store detective a few yards away and tapped her forehead. Having recovered my breath by this time, I managed an explanation. Oh, said she, little knowing how her words goaded me to the heart, he has asthma. Give him ten drops of this reliable tonic every day, price twenty-five cents. A gentle massage of his spine before each meal would help loads, and let's see, oh, yes, he ought to have one of our cute little hot water bags, and have you seen the perfectly dear little manicuring sets we are selling to the best people—

Enough is enough, I tell you! Algernon has been sick two weeks now and we are hardened. This morning he shows signs that he remembers he sang at one time. These indications make no more impression and cause no more enthusiasm on my part than the weekly visits of the ash man. In proportion to its size a canary can raise more turmoil than anything else under the sun.

Why, I'd rather raise three sets of twins.

Well, why not says you. Then you wouldn't need a canary.

Sincerely,

A. E. HAYWARD.

Experience——George V. Hobart's Modern Miracle Play, Feature of the Lamb's All-Star Gambol in Boston May 30

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

IN the feast of fun and frolic which the Lambs' All-Star Gambol will offer, when this great theatrical club presents its stars in Boston on May 30, one serious note will be sounded, and it is expected that this artistic effort will appeal strongly.

It is called "Experience," and is in the form of a miracle play. Its author is George V. Hobart, and its personages represent various attributes of character, such as Hope, Love, Youth, Ambition, Experience, Pleasure, Opportunity, Wealth, Intoxication, Passion, Poverty, Delusion, Frailty, Degradation and Crime.

"Experience" relates in allegorical form, yet with a strong dramatic appeal, the life story of Youth, its hero. It takes him from almost his first step into the real world, through its changing phases of character, until its lessons have been learned from the joys and trials of stormy experience.

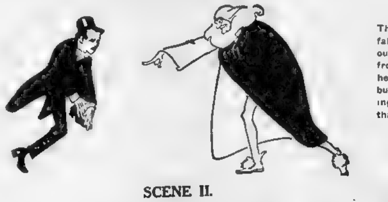
In this unusual little drama, a morality play of modern days, the spirit and purpose of the work are told by a quaint character called Everybody, who appears through the plush curtains before every short act, like the Chorus of the morality plays of older days.

Nothing could give a better idea of "Experience" than the seven speeches made by Everybody before the play's seven short acts. Through the courtesy of Mr. Hobart the City Life Section is privileged to present these excerpts in advance of the public performance.

SCENE I.

IN THE LAND WHERE DREAMS BEGIN.

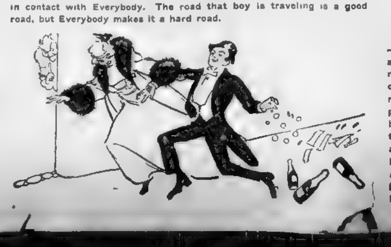
EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Dear Public:—I just want to say that my name is Everybody, and I have all the virtues and all the failings common to everybody. You see, my master, when he was writing this little play, tried his best to keep me and all my family out of it. But when the play was finished he said: "Who is going to pass judgment on this play?—Everybody!" So he sent for me, and here I am. In this little play, a young man starts out to make his first battle in life. Who is watching him?—Everybody. If he stubs his toe who says: "I told you so?"—Everybody. If he loses the fight, who says: "I knew he would?"—Everybody. If he wins, who says: "That was to have been expected?"—Everybody. So that is the reason I am here—because this little play of ours hasn't a chance on earth to get along unless it has Everybody right with it.

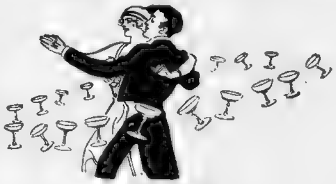


SCENE II.

IN THE STREET OF VACILLATION.

EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Nice Public:—This boy, Youth, is now cutting loose in the Big World. And soon he finds out that Satan has got all the streets sandpapered smooth, so as to make the slipping easy. This boy starts out to fight with nothing but a little money and the enthusiasm of youth. He meets Experience and Experience is Everybody's friend, though Everybody doesn't know it at the time. Experience takes this boy by the hand and brings him in contact with Everybody. The road that boy is traveling is a good road, but Everybody makes it a hard road.

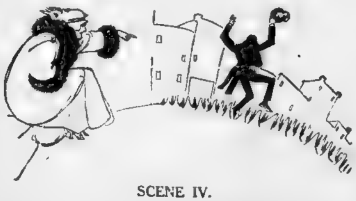




SCENE III.

IN THE PRIMROSE PATH.

EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Gentle Public:—This boy falls for pleasure but that is only human, because Everybody falls for Pleasure with less excuse, sometimes, than he has. He is now out in Tango Township, on what is called Primrose Path—and, take it from me, that is some path. The whole world owes him a rebate and he is out to collect it with a wine glass in each hand. Wealth is there, but Everybody doesn't know him very well. And Everybody is standing off in the distance and betting against him, 8 to 1, on the booze—that's the odds. 8 to 1.



SCENE IV.

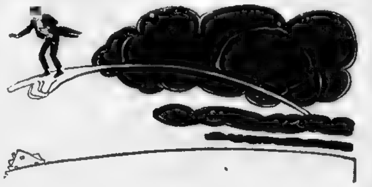
IN THE STREET OF REMORSE.

EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Amicable Public.—This boy has discovered that while Pleasure can say, "Come here!" she can also say, "Run along." He has found out, too, that a drunkard never gets any medals for endurance. This boy is now in the Street of Remorse, just down near Heartache Square, and Everybody is getting ready to slip the castors under him and slide him into the discard. Experience is going right along with that boy, but Experience isn't to be blamed, because he is an accessory ARTER the fact. The trouble with this boy is that he is a human being, and Everybody is a human being, and if you get right down to bed-rock you will find that human beings haven't much use for each other except on the basis of "value received." Anyway, Pleasure has kept him going at such a pace that he is flat broke—and being bankrupt is no pleasant occupation. Everybody knows that.

SCENE V.

IN THE HOUSE OF LOST SOULS.

EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Intelligent Public:—This boy is headed down hill, and take it from Everybody, the going is good. Satan has him out for a joy ride, with not a policeman in sight. This boy hasn't learned the lesson that some fools are bigger than other fools, because some fools know when to stop fooling. He is now in the House of Lost Souls, and it's a mighty good thing for this world that Everybody doesn't go there. There is no short cut to Fame, but it certainly is surprising how much time you can save if you are anxious to find the front gate to the lower regions. This boy is calling loud to Everybody from a dark place—but Everybody is so busy with Everybody's business that Everybody isn't listening. Besides, Everybody's ears always work better when it is a personal matter.



SCENE VI.

IN THE STREET OF FORGOTTEN DAYS.

EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Thoughtful Public:—Did you ever see, piled up over there in the West, a lot of big black clouds which just naturally scare you to death? And then do yonder, just a tiny little rift, and through that rift a tiny little ray of sunshine? He comes out and he looks around and he says, "That's all right; don't let these ugly clouds scare you—Old Master Sun is back there on the job and he is going to break these clouds wide open in a minute and scatter them—that is what he is going to do, just break them wide open." And Everybody knows that is just the way it is in life sometimes. This boy has his mind all full of dark clouds, but very soon comes that tiny little beam of light—and it catches him—right on the brink of the chasm it catches him and holds him back. Then Everybody says, "Oh, he is only getting his breath to go at it again." But Everybody doesn't see the Light.

SCENE VII.

IN THE LAND WHERE THE DREAMER AWAKENS.

EVERYBODY (appearing through plush curtains)—Patient Public:—This boy is on his way home now, and whether he won his fight or not is something that Everybody can decide. Anyway, he made a good fight and Everybody is going to tell him so.

The Committee on Metropolitan Affairs has [illegible] House Bill No. 2636, for the [illegible] of a metropolitan fire hazard district, based on Senate Bill No. 313, on petition of the Chamber of Commerce representing a conference of interests. The committee's bill limits the proposed fire district to Boston and twenty-one neighboring communities, but permits other cities and towns by a two-thirds vote of city councils or majority of voters at town meetings to share in the protection of the act and become parts of the district.

A single fire commissioner is provided for, with large powers, to serve for three years, at a salary of $3,500 per annum. The legislative committee of the Boston Real Estate Exchange submitted a substitute bill on this matter embodying certain changes in the chamber's bill, and these recommendations are substantially adopted by the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs in their reported bill.

One and Two-Family Dwellings Constitute Bulk of Building in Newton.

Permits issued by the Newton building department foreshadow a busy season for builders of that city. Since the first of the year 159 permits have been issued. Of these, fifteen are for brick structures and 144 authorize the construction of frame dwellings.

The number of permits are slightly in excess of the corresponding period last year. The estimated valuation is about the same.

The feature of the spring building operations is the entire absence of apartment construction. Not a single permit has been issued for the erection of a structure of this nature.

Only one permit has been issued for stores. The rest of the building is confined to dwellings. The growing popularity of [illegible] construction is indicated by the increased number of permits taken out for this type of construction.

REGULARITY IN SAVING KEY-NOTE TO PROSPERITY

Treasurer Suffolk Co-operative Bank.

In 1863 in the State of New York [illegible] obtained [illegible] on his property for $1,000 [illegible] fifty-three years [illegible] the rate of [illegible] per cent. [illegible] The total interest paid on the mortgage for the last fifty-one years was $3,390. The principal of $1,000 is still due. Nearly three and [illegible] the principal was paid in interest without reducing the original debt one dollar.

[illegible] from a co-operative bank. With these banks the monthly payments are easy to meet, and the loan pays itself off in about twelve years. In this case as small a monthly payment as $9.59 would have, in about twelve years, completely paid both the principal and interest.

If the party in New York state had obtained a loan from the building and loan association, as co-operative banks are called there, he could have bought and paid for at least three properties of sufficient value for an association to have loaned $1,000 on [illegible] other words [illegible] he would have [illegible] worth about $5,000 and at no time would his monthly payments have been more than $[illegible].

REGARDED AS PROVINCIAL.

The charge that Boston is a provincial [illegible] from the lack of progressive structures, rearing [illegible] the sky, such as are found in a dozen or more other American municipalities.

The visitor to the city, passing through the business section, it is charged, is impressed with the idea that Boston lacks progressiveness, on this account.

To this, Mr. Warren adds the charge that the reason that Massachusetts insurance companies invest their money in western cities instead of Boston is that they are able to build higher there, with consequent increase in the rental value of the property on a given piece of land. Concerning the harm that the law limiting the height of buildings in Boston has done, Mr. Warren says:

"[illegible] law prevents building. It diverts capital into other channels. As a direct result of this law, many contemplated sky-scrapers have gone begging. Investors would not take [illegible] a return upon [illegible]

"The real estate trusts in Boston are only paying 4 or 5 per cent., because they cannot put enough building on a piece of land to pay returns on the investment after all the other expenses have been met.

"FREE HAND NEEDED."

[illegible] land is so valuable and taxes so high, it is almost imperative that real estate investors be given a free hand in building, in order to estimate a profit. Otherwise there is no business being done.

"The operation of this law cheapens building, too. Under the existing regulations it is a question if [illegible] buildings are [illegible] investment [illegible] kind of limited height.

"As a result, first-class buildings are scarce, especially in the business [illegible] is so [illegible] Massachusetts Insurance Companies invest [illegible] Boston [illegible] the rental value of the property on a given piece of land.

"It was believed by the advocates of the present law that [illegible] height for downtown buildings would result in an increase [illegible] the business [illegible] height of the [illegible] building would spread [illegible] other sections.

Poultry Department

The government is sending out information covering all phases of the poultry business, the advice being of great benefit to the beginners who are too often led astray by the impractical notions of those who should acquire more knowledge before they try to teach.

One of the recent bulletins contains the following:

There are two popular ways in which to raise poultry, the "intensive system" and the "colony system." The first of these aims to save steps and accomplish this purpose. Long stationary houses are used. It is easier, however, to keep the birds healthy and to reproduce the stock under the second system.

Under the colony system the birds are allowed free range, the houses, which hold about [illegible] placed about 200 to 250 feet apart, so that the stock will not kill the grass. This system may be adapted to severe Winter conditions by drawing the colony houses together in a convenient place at the beginning of Winter, thus reducing the labor during the cold months. The first system is more suited for hens used solely for the production of market eggs than for those used to breed stock.

Fences mean an outlay of money, and this outlay is more or less continuous, as they must be maintained after being installed. There should be as few fences as possible dividing the lots and the yards, as land can be kept "sweet" more easily if not fenced, and fresh, sweet land is a valuable asset in poultry raising.

On good soil, a greensward may be kept up by allowing 200 or 250 square feet of land per bird. This means 217 or 174 birds per acre. More space is necessary on poor or light land. A larger number of fowls are usually kept to the acre where double yards are used and the land is frequently cultivated. Plymouth Rocks and the other heavy meat breeds in small yards require fences five to six feet high, while a fence six to seven feet high is necessary for leghorns. The upper two feet of the fence for the latter may be inclined inward at an angle of thirty degrees, or a strand of barbed wire may be used on top of the regular wire, to keep them confined. It is also sometimes necessary to clip the wing feathers of one wing of these birds that persist in getting out. A board or strip along the top of the fence is not advisable. Hens will often fly over such an arrangement.

Posts may be set or driven into the ground. They should be set eight to ten feet apart, with common poultry netting, or sixteen to twenty feet, with woven wire. Corner posts should be about eight inches in diameter and be set four feet in the ground, while intervening posts four or five inches in diameter and set three feet in the ground. That part of the post which is set in the ground may be charred or treated with some wood preservative to advantage, while corner posts should be firmly braced or set in cement.

All buildings and appliances on a poultry farm will be improved greatly, both in appearance and in serviceability by the addition of paint. One may buy ready-mixed paints, or may purchase paste pigments and oil and mix them. All surfaces should be clean and dry before they are painted. Use a priming coat made of equal parts of paint and linseed oil and cover with one or more coats of paint, which should be thoroughly rubbed into the surface.

Whitewash is the cheapest of all paints and may be used either for exterior or interior surfaces. It can be made by slacking about ten pounds of quicklime in a pail with two gallons of water, covering the pail with cloth or burlap and allowing it to slake for one hour. Water is then added to bring the whitewash to a consistency which may be applied readily.

A weatherproof whitewash for exterior surfaces may be made as follows: (1) Slake 1 bushel of quicklime in 12 gallons of hot water; (2) dissolve 2 pounds of common salt and 1 pound of sulphate of zinc in 2 gallons of boiling water; pour (2) into (1), then add 2 gallons of skim milk and mix thoroughly. Whitewash is spread lightly over the surface with a broad brush.

Poultry and Supplies

300 LICE Or More on One Hen

is by no means uncommon. No one would expect to fatten a steer with that number of "ticks" sucking his blood, but many expect the old hen to go ahead shelling out eggs while lice and mites are sapping her very life. We have counted over 2000 dead lice under a row of ten hens, on a roost board painted the night before with [illegible] The greatest lice destroyer [illegible] duty—contact kills mites, lice, bedbugs, etc. about the roosts; the vapor kills lice on the chickens sitting over it. Put up only in airtight cans. For sale at over 10,000 towns.

Leghorns Gain in Laying Contest

The [illegible] International Egg Laying Contest at Storrs yielded 91 eggs more than last week or a total of 3,649 for the twenty-eighth week. White Leghorns owned by Frances F. Lincoln of Mt. Carmel and White Wyandottes owned by Merrythought Farm of Columbia passed the 1,000 egg mark. These two pens are out distanced at this writing by only the English pen of White Wyandottes which have now laid nearly 100 dozen eggs. The best previous weekly pen record was 59 eggs and was established seven weeks ago by a Massachusetts pen of Barred Plymouth Rocks.

This record now goes by the boards, and a new high record is set at 61 eggs for the week and was made by the English pen of White Leghorns owned by Tom Barron. A Pennsylvania pen of White Leghorns owned by Marwood Poultry Farm of Butler and a Michigan pen of Buff Leghorns from Grand Rapids owned by Wolverine Poultry Farm tied for second place with 59 eggs each. A Connecticut pen of White Leghorns owned by Windsweep Farm of Redding Ridge came third for the week with 56 eggs.

A pen of White Leghorns owned by P. J. Platt, Wallingford, Pa., came next with 55 eggs. Following these closely were White Leghorns owned by Francis F. Lincoln, Mt. Carmel, Ct.; Mrs. K. E. Woodruff, New Haven, Ct., and Storrs Experiment Station with 54 eggs each.

It will be noted that the Leghorns are verily coming into their own. The eight best pens for the week are all Leghorns. Furthermore of the 59 pens that laid 50 eggs or more each for the week 23 of these or nearly 80 per cent. were Leghorns, whereas it will be remembered that the Leghorn pens constitute only 41 per cent. of the total number of competing pens.

Taking all the Leghorn pens together they produced 1,715 eggs of the week's yield, or 47 per cent. Thus any possible gain within the next few weeks or even a holding up of the present high yield must undoubtedly be expected from the higher breeds.

Further examination of the records shows that there were several changes among the ten leading pens. The pen of English White Leghorns moved from ninth place to seventh, passing on their way Danbury pen of Rhode Island Reds and a New York State pen of Barred Plymouth Rocks. A Massachusetts pen of Rhode Island Reds is now occupying tenth place, displacing a pen of the same breed owned by George P. Dearborn, Lake Como, Fla.

Another interesting feature of this twenty-eighth week is that what is believed to be the brownest egg laid not only during the present competition but during the past three years was produced by a Rhode Island Red hen owned by W. H. Bumstead, Stafford Springs, Ct. This egg was almost as abnormally small in size, weighing little more than a half ounce, as it was extraordinarily high colored.

Hatching Chicks Late in May

Owing to the late season, many poultrymen are now hatching chicks, even of the heavier breeds. It is not too late to hatch Leghorns in May and have the pullets laying before snow flies. This is also true of other Mediterranean varieties, but in the case of the heavier breeds the layers should be hatched earlier as they develop much more slowly than the small varieties. But to make layers of May hatched Leghorns they must have proper feed and attention.

When hatched at this time of year chicks may be allowed to run out of doors most of the time, where they are under natural and not artificial conditions. Being raised in the open air, with access to fresh soil and green grass, they are more apt to be hardy, they develop more rapidly and are not subject to disease as much as chicks raised by artificial means.

But in case hatching for layers is done at this time of year the eggs used should be from strong, vigorous, healthy stock, so as to have thrifty chicks to begin with. Then, if conditions are right otherwise, you may expect such chicks to make as much development in one week as those kept indoors like hothouse plants, in March, will make in two weeks.

But it is well to remember that Summer chicks need shade and must have it.

Big Plans in Honor of Anthem

BALTIMORE, May 23.—A great floating exhibition, portraying the advancement of marine architecture, will be one of the features of the celebration to be held in Baltimore from September 6 to 13, when the centenary of the writing of the American national anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner," will be observed.

In a long line, off Fort McHenry, will be anchored scores of craft, representing every type from the sailing vessel used by Hendrick Hudson to the huge dreadnoughts of the United States and foreign navies. Plans are rapidly being completed by the managing directors of the Centennial Commission to make this exhibition of the widest scope and the highest educational character.

National Forest of Vanderbilt Estate

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 23.—The United States Forestry Commission has just purchased almost the entire Cavender Bill estate, consisting of 86,700 acres of the Pisgah forest property, for a total sum of $433,851, according to advices received here. The property will be turned into a national game preserve.

The estate was the property of the late George W. Vanderbilt, and was willed by him to his widow, who offered it to the government at $200,000 less than formerly asked.

The commission wrote Governor Craig, asking him to have enacted bills to provide for co-operation between the State of North Carolina and the federal government in making Pisgah forest a national game preserve. The name "Pisgah Forest," by which the tract of land has been known for many years, will be retained.

'TAKE IN WASHING' ACTORS COMING FOR THE GAMBOL

170 Stars of the Lambs for Show in Boston on Memorial Day.

"Take in your washing, the actors are coming." This ancient warning, from the days when the actor was a roving mountebank or minstrel, helping himself to anything loose that was lying around, will not be entirely inapplicable when the Lambs' Club actors make their presence known next Saturday evening, May 30 (Memorial Day).

They are on an expedition of pillage. With intended malice at least 170 stars, leading men and villains predominating, propose to extract [illegible] more laughter than you ever have given vent to in one evening, and incidentally to purloin a few dollars for their new clubhouse.

"The actors are coming to town." But they will be heralded by a brass band, led by the world's greatest conductor, John Philip Sousa, and met on their arrival by the Governor of the State and the Mayor of Boston. Before the performance the Lambs will parade in good old minstrel fashion to the Boston Opera House, where they promise the most remarkable entertainment ever shown in this city. This is some assertion, in face of the new law about "honest advertising," but consider what the Lambs will offer and who will offer it.

ARRAY OF STARS.

There will be a minstrel first part. Imagine DeWolf Hopper as interlocutor, and in blackface! And then conjure up the possibilities of smart raillery and unctious drollery between such men as Frank McIntyre, Jack Hazzard, Andrew Mack, Nat M. Wills, Frank Lalor, Macklyn Arbuckle, Irvin S. Cobb, Clayton White, Charles E. Evans, Joseph W. Herbert, Hap Ward, Charles J. Ross, Frank Doane, Charles Hopper, Frank Croxton, Thomas A. Wise, Harry Williams and Irving Berlin, and other notables in the various fields of intellectual activity.

In the circle, during this great minstrel frolic, will sit your favorite romantic actor side by side with "chorus men" who will numeber many of the greatest light opera singers on the stage. In fact, the minstrel first part will include the entire strength of the company, and while all the names cannot be mentioned in one story it will be good sport to discover whether, behind their blackface makeup, you can discern the noble personalities of such stars as Bruce McRae, William Farnum, Henry Woodruff, Digby Bell, William Elliott, George Nash, Frederick Perry, Brandon Tynan, Frank Croxton, John Hendricks, Denman Maley, Stephen Maley, W. J. Kelly, Glenn Hall, Malcolm Williams, Neal McCay, George Park, George W. Barnum, Scott Welsh, Effingham Pinto, Joseph Kilgour, John E. Henshaw, Frank Deshon and many others.

CARTOON CONTEST.

The individual numbers of the minstrel first part will be an introductory overture by John Philip Sousa, with incidental solos by DeWolf Hopper and Scott Welsh; humorous ditty, "Johnny Brown," by Charles E. Evans; ballad, "Sweet Marie," by Glenn Hall; comic songs by all the end men, especially "My Tango Girl," written and sung by Andrew Mack; and "Off to Mexico," written and sung by Irving Berlin.

This minstrel number will be followed by a "contest" between four of America's greatest cartoonists, Winsor McCay, R. F. Outcault, Hy Mayer and George McManus, who will try to outsketch each other, all working at the same time.

The third number on the bill will be "The Rainbow Cocktail," a dazzling dance number, by Hazzard Short, and Roy and Kenneth Webb, introducing such popular stars as Henry Woodruff and Edwin Stevens, together with several petticoated Lambs, who as terpsichorean queens will seek to disguise the male personalities of Effingham Pinto, Glenn Hall, Will Deming, Richard Tabor, William Courtleigh, Jr., and Hazzard Short. This will bring the first part to an end.

John Philip Sousa, the greatest of the band masters, will start the thrills after a brief intermission with his new military number, "The Lambs' March," written especially for the occasion and played by his entire band of sixty.

ONE SERIOUS NOTE.

This will be followed by the one serious note of the program, a modern morality play entitled "Experience," written by George V. Hobart, with a notable cast, including William Elliott as Youth, Frederick Perry as Experience, Effingham Pinto as Passion, Digby Bell as Wealth, W. J. Kelly as Pleasure, Wilton Lackaye as Crime, William Farnum as Ambition, and Stephen Maley, Richard Tabor, Glenn Hall, Will S. Deming, Charles Dow Clark, George Probert and George Barnum in other allegorical roles.

This unusual drama takes its people through the following significant scenes: 1, In the Land Where Dreams Begin; 2, in the Street of Vacillation; 3, in the Primrose Path; 4, in the Street of Remorse; 5, in the House of Lost Souls; 6, in the Street of Forgotten Days; 7, in the Land Where the Dreamer Awakens.

The incidental music, composed by Max Bendix, will be a feature of the presentation, with a symphony orchestra of fifty.

That incomparable laugh-maker, Nat C. Wills, will follow the serious play in his bright monologue, "The Happy Tramp," after which will be disclosed one of the brightest and liveliest bits of charm and fancy, a dancing number by John L. Golden and R. H. Burnside, called "the Book of Life," or "The Dancing Ages." In this DeWolf Hopper will play a jester. Frank McIntyre will play a chubby boy of eight and Will Archie will be his six-year-old sweetheart.

Bright character bits will be played by Bruce McRae, Macklyn Arbuckle, Charles Hopper, Charles E. Evans, Frank Doane and Stephen Maley, while among the "ravishing beauties" in their latest Parisian gowns and millinery will be Morgan Coman, Will J. Deming, William Elliott, John Slavin, E. Ray Goetz and William Courtleigh, Jr.

And now, ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Burton Holmes will chaperone a noble company of Lambs' all stars, who, being thousands of miles from Boston, are unable to greet you in propria personae. But they will be there on the film, [illegible] and cajoling you in their [illegible] personality to the accompaniment of Mr. Holmes' happy comments.

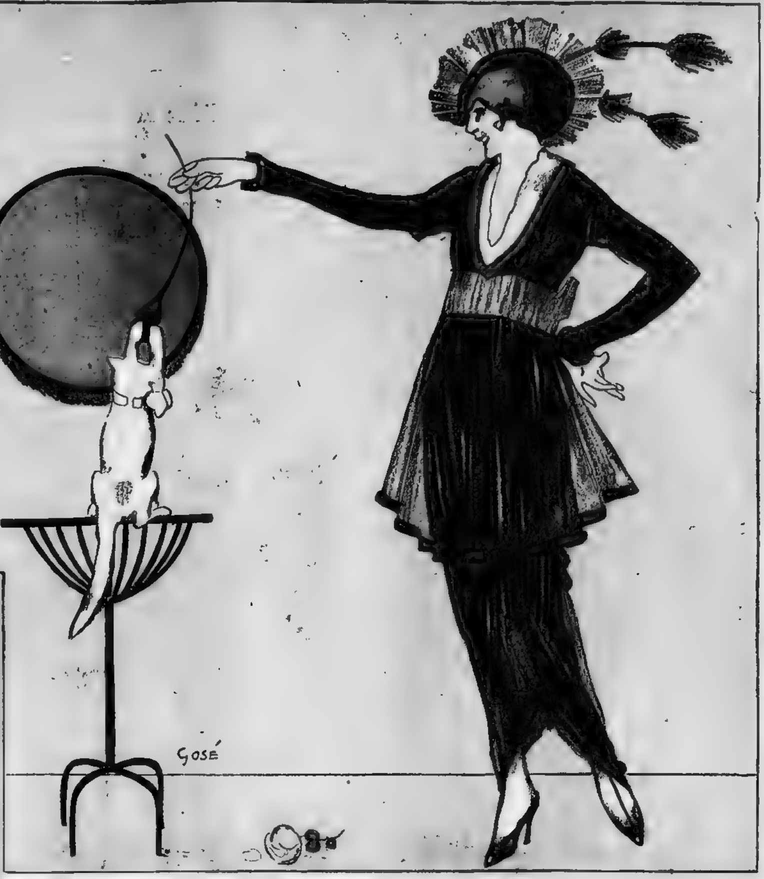
"PARISIENNES" BY GOSÉ

Charming Types by the New Spanish Artist Who Has Introduced a Novel Kind of "Chic" in the Gay City



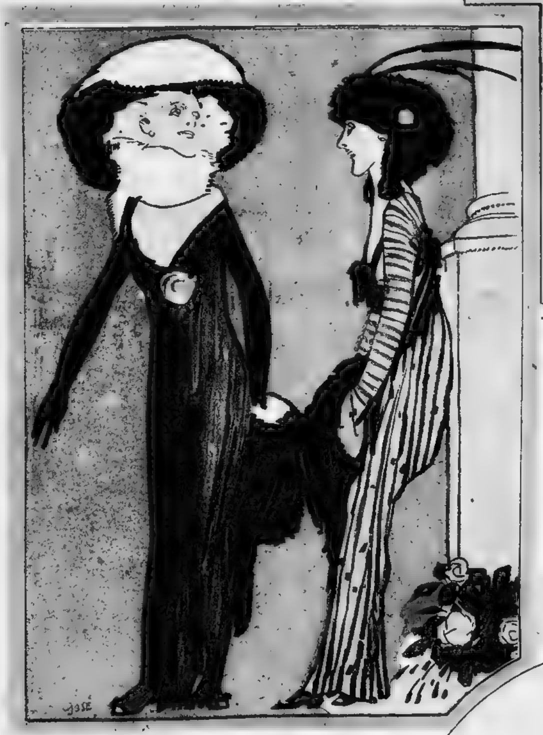
"The Red-Haired Lady in Black with the White Cat," a Typical Gose Picture from "Gran Mondo"

AN artist who has just gained remarkable success as a delineator of fashionable Parisiennes is Francisco Janvier Gose.

Gose came from Spain to Paris. He has added a mysterious, romantic Spanish touch to the most accurate portrayal of Parisian fashions and elegances.

To look like a Gose sketch is now the highest aim of the Parisian elegante, and it will soon be that of her New York sister also. Observe the sketch of the young woman in a black dress playing with a white cat. Note the exquisite grace of her slender figure. Above all, see how the current costumes have been represented without introducing anything of the grotesque or ridiculous.

This picture disposes of the idea that the present fashions must be ugly. Here is a splendid suggestion in dress for any woman with warm coloring and reddish hair. The original of this sketch is one of the most admired beauties of the moment in Paris.



"Intellectuals" by Gose. Published in "Simplicissimus"

We see an entirely different type in the woman who is throwing open her magnificent opera cloak. Here is a figure of queenly dignity, with a marked suggestion of Spanish gravity and pride. The original is a Spanish millionaire's wife very prominent in the fashionable society of Paris. Her cloak was the most splendid and costly creation that habitues of the Paris Grand Opera had ever seen.

In the sketch of the two women chatting we see two supreme types of Parisian elegance. The careless grace, the proud but easy carriage of the figure, reveal to us persons who belong to the highest place in the haut monde. Their clothes are absolutely fashionable, yet perfectly artistic. They were sketched at a party of the Baroness de Rothschild.

Gose came to Paris intending to study painting, but he never even entered the studio of a professor His ready ability to make clever sketches of life as he saw it on the boulevards, in the Bois or at the theatre led him to take up this class of work, and he jumped into fame at the start. The highly decorative quality of his art was greatly appreciated.

Gose's work is much admired by Queen Victoria of Spain, and he has received a commission to make some decorations for her nursery.

Gose usually makes large paintings in oil, even for the smallest illustrations, as his talent, which follows old Spanish traditions, forces him to paint. This means that it is a great distinction to be drawn by Gose and not the trifling attention that one receives from a mere pen-and-ink artist.

Some of the dignity and grace that ennobles the work of Velasques lives again in the pictures of this delineator of fashionable Paris women. He is greeted as the herald of a new and better era in the styles. How uncouth and graceless many of the women painted recently by fashionable portrait painters appear beside these exquisite figures. Under the inspiration of Gose the women of Paris society are now trying to be dignified even in their dissipations.

Why It Is Wicked for Colleges to Teach Girls to Be Acrobats

By Dr. William Lee Howard

A FEW days ago a college girl fell from a horizontal bar and broke her right leg. If this accident keeps her away from a college where acrobatic feats and manly emulation are more in vogue than training in womanly traits it will be a splendid lesson for this and other girls.

No man with an elemental knowledge of life will deny that in mere muscular strength, as well as in rapidity and precision of muscular movements, woman is inferior to man.

There are elements belonging to the female sex which are far stronger and more valuable to the race than any possessed by the male. These need the highest sort of training and the most careful consideration.

Woman, every girl, needs exercise and fresh air. But this exercise must be along female lines. It must be exercise that develops the woman in her. The abdomen needs strengthening, back and chest must be able to withstand physical strain, and, above all, the girl's nervous system must have every opportunity to rest and grow

Strenuous and dangerous "stunts," such as trapeze and horizontal bar work, mean a strain upon the nervous system. It may not show during the early years, but in the years of stress and storm there will appear a lack of balanced nerve elements.

The nervous system, every item which makes the nerves grow and store up power, need to be husbanded, not wasted. Especially true is this in the young woman. Outdoor exercise, tennis, golf, walking, fishing, put little strain upon the nervous system and give the girl fresh air and sufficient muscular activity.

Of what possible value is a pair of manly biceps in a young woman if at thirty years of age she has no reserve nervous force? She does not need such a pair of freak arms to carry a baby. If she has spent her college days in learning the giant's swing and had a few hard falls there is little fear of her being able to have a baby to carry.

Men will never have complete confidence in women's colleges so long as these colleges do not distinctly differentiate between training a woman to be the best kind of a woman in every way and that of trying to outdo man in his special sphere.

Here are some physiological facts for every girl and all parents of a girl to remember. In the blood of women and in their muscles there is more water than in those of men. This is a matter of organic constitution. This latter factor accounts for more than a small proportion of the immense muscular difference between man and woman.

Violent physical exercise, belonging to man alone, takes this excess of water from the woman's organization. Nature put it there for a special purpose. When the tissues and organs are robbed of this element woman approaches, physiologically, the state of man. This is one cause for women athletes being, as a rule, sterile.

Women are catabolic, men anabolic. This means that woman is planned to store up force—the excess of water aids in this storing repose—and have an overabundance of nervous energy at the momentous periods of her life—motherhood, for example. Anabolic means a general tendency to violent exercise and all those actions we associate with manly activities.

All these facts teach, as the history of man has shown, that the motor superiority of man is a deep-lying elemental force, something that rightly belongs to man. In psychic organization woman is man's superior When girls' colleges attempt to twist biologic laws they are also attempting to twist the girls—mentally and physically.

It is not unknown to doctors and psychologists why there is so much hue and cry about the race suicide of college women who marry. It is not strange why they marry late, if at all.

No amount of higher education can do aught but bring a woman to be the best kind of a woman and mother. But this higher education must be that of developing a woman as a woman, not as a horizontal bar freak or trapeze performer, not a ball thrower, so that in later life she finds it impossible to nurse a baby, not a woman who thinks that by having a pair of muscular arms she can fight better at the polls.

From fourteen years of age to twenty-two no girl should have any muscular strain put upon her developing organs. Don't try to become a female athlete like the circus and vaudeville "girls." Many of these are young men dressed as young women.

Train yourself to be a strong, healthy woman. There is glory in this state—glory for your children and the nation. What a beautiful picture of normal conditions is shown in the excavations of Pompeii and Herculaneum, where we witness the bodies of men indicating violent muscular efforts of resistance and rescue, the women, calm faced, clasping their babies!

EASY Ways to PREVENT MALARIA

How Screens, Proper Drainage and a Few Cents' Worth of Quinine Will Save You No End of Suffering and Costly Doctors' Bills

By R. H. Von EGDORF,

Surgeon United States Public Health Service.

MALARIA is contracted only through the bite of a special mosquito. Man, in the first place, infects the mosquito, and the mosquito, in turn, infects man. This chain of life of the malaria germ—from man to mosquito to man—is the fundamental principle upon which are based all measures for the prevention of the disease.

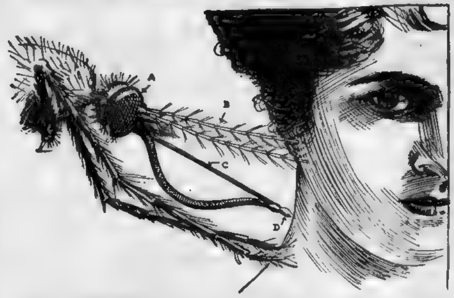
The latest investigations absolutely exclude air, water and food as methods by which malaria may be contracted. The mosquito is not born with the malaria germs, but to get them must first bite a person who has them in his blood.

The malaria germ which begins its life in man's red blood cells is a small animal It requires for its existence conditions entirely different from those of the typhoid, diphtheria and tuberculosis germs, which are vegetables.

To prevent malaria the germ's chain of life must be broken somewhere—either in the mosquito or in man. The first step in its prevention is a knowledge of the life and habits of the particular mosquito which transmits malaria.

The malaria-bearing mosquito usually bites at dusk or twilight or some time during the hours between sunset and sunrise. It will also bite, if hungry, in a dark and shady place during the day, but the usual time is about sunset. It is therefore prudent to avoid the bite of mosquitoes at those hours.

Two measures, easy of adoption, will give protection. These are screening of the bed room, or preferably the whole house, and the use of mosquito bars.



A Greatly Enlarged Mosquito in the Act of Biting. A—the Insect's Eye; B—the Antennae; C—the Six Lancets of the Proboscis Which Puncture the Skin and Carry the Malaria Germs into the Blood.; D—the Labella.

In screening the house, this must be absolute. Windows and doors must be tight, the windows should be entirely screened, and not half-way or with telescoping screens. The doors must be well fitting. The wire gauze should be of a small mesh, an 18-mesh wire, which means that there are eighteen strands to the inch. The fireplace in the room must also be absolutely closed against the possible entrance of mosquitoes. Heavy paper, or better still, cotton cloth, nailed down over the fireplace with strips of lathing over the edges of the cloth, to insure a tight fit, will suffice. If the fireplace will not permit of tacking down such material it may be fastened into place with strips of adhesive plaster

The use of mosquito nets over beds will give a certain amount of protection. They should be amply large, so that they may be easily tucked in under the mattresses. They should never be allowed to hang down to the floor. The reason for this is that mosquitoes may and do hide under the beds during the daytime. Great care is necessary to see that mosquito nets are always in good repair, as a single tear or hole will allow the entrance of mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes breed in any standing water. The malaria-bearing mosquito likes shallow pools protected by shade, grass or other vegetation such as may be found in poorly drained ditches, marshes, places in the woods, hoof prints of cattle and horses along the edge of a branch creek or bayou, hog wallows and sometimes troughs, barrels and the like.

Mosquitoes lay their eggs on such collections of water. These hatch into larvae, or "wiggle tails," then into pupae, and finally change into mosquitoes. From nine to fifteen days is required for development from egg to mosquito.

To get rid of such standing water, subsoil drains, the filling up of low places and the emptying of water containers at least once each week are necessary. Drainage is simple but often costly, yet if done it will do away permanently with a source of the trouble

Kerosene oil, poured on the water—one to two ounces of oil for every fifteen square feet of surface—may be employed to kill the "wiggle tails" or larvae. This method may be used in barrels or other water containers, but must be repeated every week. The emptying and wiping out of water containers such as are found in chicken yards, stables, etc., before refilling with water, will serve all practical purposes

The farmer should adopt the screening measure first and then look after the destruction of breeding places for mosquitoes.

Quinine is specific in curing the disease, and also in preventing it. The active symptoms of malaria are easily controlled by the proper administration of quinine, but unfortunately the individual who suffers with malaria does not usually keep it up long enough to free his system entirely of the malaria germ. As a result, persons frequently carry the germ in the blood without having active symptoms of the disease, and on being bitten by mosquitoes spread the infection

Every one suffering with malarial fever should continue treatment long enough to prevent his infecting mosquitoes and to avoid the possibility of developing a relapse.

Quinine, in five-grain doses for adults, taken morning and evening on two consecutive days each week, say, Saturday morning and evening and Sunday morning and evening, from May 1 to November 1 or December 1, will prevent malaria. Where persons are unusually exposed at night in highly malarious regions, three to five grains of quinine should be taken daily during the height of the malarial season, August and September, and on two consecutive days a week during the remaining period.

Quinine may be bought at from fifty to sixty cents an ounce, equal to 480 grains. Ane hundred capsules with a capacity of five grains each will cost fifteen cents. An ounce of quinine and 100 capsules will be sufficient for twenty-four weeks, using twenty grains of quinine each week.

The single dose for a child should be one grain for each three years of age. A child of ten years would therefore receive three grains at a dose, a total of six grains a day, or twelve grains a week.

At a cost of seventy-five cents to one dollar an adult may remain free from malaria for the entire year. A person may choose to take three grains a day, which is a good tonic dose and acts as a preventive. An ounce of quinine would then be sufficient for 160 days.

It is always well for a person to continue the use of quinine for one month beyond the malarial season In the South malaria prevails mostly during the months of June, July, August and September It decreases in October, and markedly in November. Continue quinine therefore to December 1.

Chill tonics are popular in many sections of the country. It should be known that their good effect is from the quinine they contain. Most of these preparations are put up in bottles of eight ounces, and each teaspoonful contains one grain of quinine. Each bottle of eight ounces, therefore, contains sixty-four grains, or sixty-four teaspoonful doses

The dose usually prescribed for adults is one tablespoonful, which represents four grains. The regular price for a bottle is fifty cents.

The bottle of chill tonic for an adult would, therefore, be enough for only three weeks and two bottles for six weeks, as against the simple purchase of quinine capsules at the same price, which will suffice for six months. The continued use of quinine will do no harm

There are people who say they cannot take quinine. Such persons should avoid the bites of mosquitoes, especially at night.

To prevent malaria, therefore, use all measures. Screen your houses and make them mosquito proof. Use mosquito bars over beds if the house is not well screened. Use quinine, which will keep your system free from the malaria germ. To prevent the breeding of mosquitoes, clear ditches of grass and weeds and do away with all stagnant water

One example of the good effect of screening and the economic benefit derived therefrom, cited to me by Dr. Henry Thibault, is here given:

A farmer's family of nine members, living in Arkansas, gave a history of having suffered attacks of malarial fevers every season during three years The medical attendance cost on an average of $175 each year. Under the direction of Dr. Thibault, the attending physician, measures were taken against the breeding of mosquitoes in and about the home, and the screening of all windows, doors, and open hallways was adopted. The family remained free from malaria and lived in the same home four years, and the bills for medical attendance averaged only $15 to $20 each year thereafter.

It was estimated that the cost of screening the house in this instance was $40. The cost of medical attendance before screening was $175 a year and after screening, $15 to $20 a year.

In a family living in North Carolina, in a mill town where malarial fevers prevailed to a great extent, each of the ten members of one family took three grains of quinine in capsules, daily, beginning on June 1. On September 20 one member of this family decided not to continue the use of quinine, and on October 13 this member developed malarial fever, the other nine remaining in perfect health. Malarial fever prevailed among families in the immediate neighborhood where this particular family resided.

JUST WHAT FOODS to Eat, and HOW MUCH

PHYSIOLOGISTS tell us that the food of man should consist of proteids, fats, carbohydrates, mineral salts and water; but that these are not of equal importance. The proteids, mineral salts and water are absolutely necessary to maintain life; while the fats and the carbohydrates (or sugars, in one or other of their forms) can, in case of need, both be manufactured within the body when proteids are supplied to it in sufficient quantity.

These proteids, of which egg-albumen is probably the most familiar example, are the chief source of energy within the body, and are employed at once in the repair and replacement of the cells of which the bodily tissues consist, and of the protoplasm which they contain, and which forms, as many think, the seat of life. They are broken up mainly in the muscular tissue for the production of physical work; and it is said that some part of them is excreted from the blood as urea without forming any part of the cellular tissue.

The proteids are present in varying proportion in all flesh-foods, in milk and its derivatives, and in eggs, as well as in cereals, peas and beans, and some other vegetables. They are practically the sole source of the nitrogen required by man's body, neither fats nor carbohydrates containing any.

If we take a man of 154 pounds in weight as the normal type, we find that when doing little or no work his daily output by all excretory processes is nearly one-half an ounce of nitrogen and seven ounces of carbon; and it is therefore considered that at least this amount is required to be taken into the body during a day. As, however, this makes no allowance for waste or for expenditure in the shape of heat or work, nor for the storing up of reserve in the shape of muscle or fat, it is necessary to provide a somewhat greater supply. An amount of more than half an ounce of nitrogen to nine ounces of carbon in the daily food is shown by experience to be what is necessary, and this for a man of average health and condition would amount to about one-hundredth part of his body weight in solid food.

This solid food, however, can evidently be administered in different forms. Oatmeal, which contains nitrogen and carbon in about the right proportion of one to fifteen, ought, theoretically, to suffice; but the large quantity of it which would have to be taken would throw so much work on the digestive organs as to make it impossible in practice. Hence it is necessary, in order to get at a proper minimum, to combine with it some food, such as bacon, eggs or cheese, which gives a higher supply of nitrogen with less strain on the digestion. Bread, again, which contains a proportion of nitrogen to carbon nearly as high as oatmeal, makes an excellent staple of diet and is open to fewer objections otherwise

According to Dr. Waller, in his "Human Physiology," an ideal diet for a man in good health would be a pound of bread, half a pound of meat, a quarter of a pound of fat, a pound of potatoes, half a pint of milk, a quarter of a pound of eggs, and an eighth of a pound of cheese every day.

It is probable, however, that neither this nor any other system of diet based on scientific principles would keep a man for long in good health. The organism demands variety, and if it does not get it resents the fact by refusing to do its work. It is a well-known fact that with most people any form of food indulged in day after day ceases to be digested, as witness the wagers still laid in America as to the number of pigeons that a man can consume in the course of a week For the same reason, the prospect of a future in which tabloids, or very small quantities of some jelly, will form all our food is an illusion, and not all the talent of writers like Mr. Wells can make us believe in its realization. Man's excessively complicated digestive organs evolved from his beast-like forefathers would certainly rebel with fatal effect against any such ethereal fare.

The upshot of the whole matter is that man demands a varied as well as a sustaining diet, and that no one form of food should be adhered to for long. Hence even the occasional excesses of seasons like the present probably have their uses, and if sufficiently infrequent may even be beneficial rather than otherwise to the healthy body.

It should not be lost sight of, however, that 1 per cent. of one's total weight in solid food is quite sufficient, not only to support life, but to provide one with all the energy one needs for one day, and that we should probably all be better for keeping as near to this limit as we can.

How THEATRES Can Be Made SAFE

SAFETY from the peril of fire in theatres is a question that every great city has been forced to consider. The public has on numerous occasions been taught that those who provide amusement do not always provide for the safety of their patrons.

To understand what the fundamentals of safety are in a theatre, compare the stage section to an open fireplace. To be safe, the stage section should have all the attributes of an open fireplace, viz.: A proscenium wall which separates the stage section from the auditorium and which corresponds to the brick front wall of the average fireplace.

There should be an asbestos curtain over the enormous opening in the proscenium wall to prevent a stage fire from getting out into the auditorium—a fire screen in front of a fireplace acts similarly; there should be an automatic sprinkler system under the stage roof to drench fires with water automatically—just as water would be used to put out a chimney fire; and last, but most important of all, there should be an opening in the roof of the stage

To understand how necessary it is to have a vent in the stage roof, just imagine what would happen in the case of a fireplace that had no opening to the chimney. The smoke and gases from the fire would follow the draught out into the room, and nobody could remain in the vicinity of such a fireplace while the fire was burning The same thing would happen if a fire occurred on a stage that had no roof opening. The smoke and gases would have to follow the draught out into the auditorium.

It was because of the improper system of ventilation that there has been such great loss of life in many theatre fires. Instead of the air currents moving in toward the stage, they swept out over the audience, and persons in the balcony and gallery were suffocated in their seats by the deadly gases coming from the fire on the stage.

Of course, in addition to these precautions on the stage, the auditorium should be equipped with numerous exits, all plainly marked with lights and signs.

How "DIZZY SPELLS" Put Everybody in DANGER

A RECENT investigation by a group of transportation experts and a number of doctors has brought to light the fact that an astonishingly large proportion of accidents of all kinds is due to "dizzy spells"—or, as the doctors phrased it, to certain common forms of epilepsy

One of the worst railroad wrecks of recent years was due to an engineer running beyond a danger signal while suffering from one of these "spells." The engineer confessed that he had suffered from these a few times, but always supposed they were due to indigestion, as they passed off in a minute or two.

A recent elevator accident, in which the elevator plunged beyond control, was caused by a mental confusion on the part of the elevator runner. He thought he was going to faint and dragged the lever to full speed when he believed he was slackening the descent.

Of serious danger to everybody who walks or rides is the possibility of "giddy spells" among chauffeurs. Hundreds of men who would not for a moment be considered sound enough to run a locomotive are at the steering wheels of motor cars. Some of these, such as auto trucks, like freight locomotives, do not attain to great speed; others, such as the big touring cars, far outstrip the average locomotive engaged in suburban service. The racing cars outstrip the swiftest express train and are a still greater menace because they have no rails to hold their wheels to the path they should take.

It is beginning to be understood that machinery needs to be made "dizzy proof" more than to be made "fool proof." Many factory workers are killed or crippled for life by a moment's inattention due to a sense of dizziness

Among the unexpected accidents which the investigators found to have been due to the minor epileptic seizures we call "dizzy spells" were a barber who nearly cut his patron's throat while shaving him; a nurse who fell downstairs with a child in her arms and crippled it for life; a watchman who set fire with his lantern to a building he was hired to protect; and, most unexpected of all, a maid who nearly blinded her mistress with a pair of overheated curling tongs. Numberless instances were shown where a family was left penniless because the bread-winner had fallen from a ladder during such an attack.

The head of the commission making this report concludes by saying that a wealthy engineer of his acquaintance, who averages one epileptic seizure a week, persists in driving his own automobile. It is suggested that persons subject to "dizzy spells" should be prohibited by law from driving motor cars or engaging in any occupation where their momentary incapacity might imperil the lives of others

Why YAWNS are GOOD for You

ACCORDING to most of our books on etiquette, it is very improper to yawn; but from the standpoint of health it is one of the best things we can do.

For one thing, a yawn ventilates the lungs. When you take an ordinary breath the lungs are not completely filled, nor are they thoroughly emptied by an ordinary respiration. There is a certain quantity of air left in the lungs always—what physiologists call "residual air."

This air in time becomes foul and affects the blood, and through the blood the nervous centres. Then at certain times certain nerves get tickled, as it were, and the result is a long-drawn-out yawn, which has the power of stretching the lungs to their fullest extent, driving out all the foul air and drawing in a supply of fresh, pure air.

You will perhaps be surprised to know that yawning is beneficial to your hearing When you give an extra big yawn you hear a cracking sound inside your head. That is due to the stretching and opening of the Eustachian tubes. These tubes connect the ear and the back of the throat. If they are congested, as happens when you have a bad cold in the head, you complain of deafness

If you feel inclined to yawn by all means do so, regardless of what your book on etiquette may say. It is Nature's way of cleaning out your lungs and the air passages in your head

Is YOUR LIFE WORTH $1.50?

IT takes money to carry on a great educational movement and it takes money to conduct a public health service. The war between preventable disease and death is therefore a struggle between the dollar and the death-rate

With our present-day knowledge of disease, good health is a commodity which can be bought, if our cities, counties and States are willing to pay the price. For $1.50 per capita per year, any community can practically banish those diseases which we now have the means of preventing and can greatly reduce the number of deaths from all causes.

One dollar and a half per year! Not quite half a cent a day to save life from destruction by known causes! Three cents a week, twelve and one-half cents a month, to protect each man, woman and child from disease which we know how to prevent and which we know will exact a toll of many lives during the next year and all succeeding years until proper preventive methods are inaugurated!

A pitiably small sum, one thinks. Yet how much are our most advanced commonwealths spending for this purpose? Pennsylvania heads the list with 48 cents per capita, per annum; Arkansas, at the bottom, does not spend a cent; New York spends 1.7 cents; Massachusetts, 4.2 cents; Indiana, 1.8 cents; and so on.

In 1911, fifty of the largest American cities with a total preventable deathlist of 117,724, spent an average of 30 cents per capita to prevent disease, and $1.65 per capita to prevent fires. If we could have in every city as good a sanitary service as we now have fire protection, many lives that are now needlessly sacrificed could be saved.

The people can have such protection if they want it and if they will pay for it. Safety from disease can be obtained just as we obtain safety from fire and from thieves. Health can be secured if society will foot the bill.

YOU MIGHT TRY---

A Labor Saving Plan.

TRY using a small paint brush for greasing cake, bread or gem pans. It is a great help and can be easily cleaned in warm soap suds.

What to Do with the Covers.

SAVE the covers of cocoa or mustard boxes to use for cleansing frying pans and sauce pans. Hammer down sharp side. Scrape with the sharp lower edge. The rounding corners of the covers fit in the round pans much better than anything you can buy for the purpose.

A French Chef's Advice.

SOUP should never be salted while cooking until it has been thoroughly skimmed, as salt prevents the scum from rising.

For a Rusty Sink.

THERE'S nothing better for cleaning a sink that has become rusty than kerosene oil.

NEW HOPE of a CURE for HAY FEVER

PERHAPS no affection is more common and more difficult to relieve than hay fever. It is called hay fever because it makes its appearance every Spring when the meadows begin to flower. The disease is especially frequent in the United States, England, Germany and the north of France. It recurs with despairing regularity every year and sometimes several times a year in persons who are unfortunate enough to suffer a first attack.

Hay fever sets in suddenly with frequent attacks of sneezing, running from the eyes, abundant secretion from the nose and swollen mucous membrane, rendering breathing impossible. It is frequently accompanied with fever and attacks resembling asthma. Examination of the nose shows congestion of the mucous membrane covering the turbinated bones.

Just what causes hay fever remains a good deal of a mystery The most generally accepted theory is that it is not caused, as was formerly supposed, by the pollen of flowers itself, but by some unknown microbe which finds an abiding place in the pollen.

At the time of year when plants flower this microbe evidently finds conditions most favorable for its development. When the pollen is scattered through the air the microbes go with it and when they reach the mucous membranes of the eyes, nose or bronchial tubes they set up the infection we know as hay fever.

Professor Mouneyrat, a French physician, is one of many students who for years have been trying to find a specific for this most annoying disease. At first he tried, internally, salycilic acid, salol and phenacetin, but these produced little or no effect. Quinine gave better results, but they were not lasting

From quinine he turned to other malarial remedies, but none proved thoroughly successful until at last he tried hectine, a new preparation having arsenic for its base.

This worked like a charm In several chronic cases it removed all symptoms of hay fever within three days.

Hectine, according to Professor Mouneyrat, may be given in the form of pills or solution. On the first day, 40 drops (one pill) are taken night and morning in a little water; on the second, third and fourth days, 50 drops (one pill) twice a day. After the fourth day the drug is taken only every second day until the bottle is finished.

Besides acting as a specific on hay fever, hectine is said to increase the appetite, the strength and the weight of the patient.

Beware of Speedy Surgeons

"BEWARE of the surgeon who has a record for speed in performing operations," advises Sir Berkely Moynihan in his recent address before the British Medical Association. The great difference in shock and prostration following different cases of the same operation is usually the result of opposite methods.

The gentle surgeon who handles the tissues and organs as if they were his own and avoids bruising or insulting the nerves as if they were awake and conscious must take much more time for his work.

The operator who works with one eye on the clock lacerates, tears and upsets a patient's internal economy, and he is much more likely to overlook something. Second operations most frequently follow quick, brilliant first performances.

Dr. Moynihan refers to the tactics of the brilliant speed record holders as "canine methods." Of course, nobody wishes to be upon the operating table a moment longer than necessary, nor to take an extra breath of ether. But the results of a few drops more of anaesthetic are negligible and not to be compared with the miseries and often fatal effect of shock.

"The perfect surgeon must have the heart of a lion and the hand of a lady, never the claws of a lion and the heart of a sheep. An operation is done quickly enough when it is done right."

"WHO POSED FOR THAT HORRID STATUE!" Cries Shocked Queen Mary

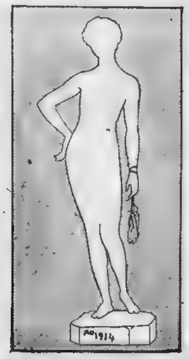
Very Entertaining Game of Hide and Seek in the British Aristocracy to Find and Punish the Originals of Countess Gleichen's Undraped "Society Woman of 1914" Who Carries Only a Vanity Bag

LADY MARJORIE MANNERS

COUNTESS OF WESTMORELAND

Duchess of Westminster

Three Beauties of the English Court, Each of Whom Denies That She Had Anything to Do with the Statue.



Outline Drawing of the Countess of Gleichen Statue, Showing the "Typical Lines of 1914."

THE most interesting, if not the most artistic, work in the current exhibition of the Royal Academy in London is a statue by the Countess Feodora Gleichen.

It is the most interesting in the sense that it has attracted the attention of more people of all classes than any other work, even if the high-browed critics have sniffed at it.

Why is this statue so interesting? Because it represents an undraped figure of considerable attractiveness. Because it is said to be the composite likeness of three or more prominent noble society women. Because the sculptress is a cousin of Queen Mary. Because Her Majesty has made a terrible fuss about it. There are other reasons, but probably those are enough.

The statue is labelled "The Woman of 1914." That means, of course, that it is the woman of fashionable and aristocratic society, the woman who wears the latest creations and omissions in dress.

The Countess Gleichen enjoys spacious apartments in historic St. James's Palace through the royal bounty, and there she has a fine studio. She has been regarded as an amateur sculptress and has practised her art for many years without creating any sensation. Many of the most prominent women in fashionable society, including most of the British duchesses, have been there to pose for her. The royal sculptress has made busts of them conventionally attired, and these have been exhibited to an admiring world with the real names attached.

Now, the general understanding is that some of these noble visitors posed for the undraped statue at the Academy. The popular idea is that the statue represents a composite of the best known and most admired beauties in English society. Some members of the fashionable set assert that they can recognize certain striking lines of beauty in the figure as belonging to friends of theirs. At first there were not lacking ladies who boldly claimed that they were the whole thing, in spite of the strong evidence that it was a composite portrait. Their tone has changed, however, since Queen Mary went on the war path.

The Countess Gleichen herself asserted when her work first excited remark that it represented a type, and not a single person. To explain this statement away, one of the unblushing ones who wanted to be the whole thing said:

"Oh, yes, the Countess Feddy tried to make a composite statue of a lot of us, but my figure impressed her so much that she couldn't help making me. Anybody can see that it's my figure."

"The Woman of 1914" is a slender limbed figure standing in a drooping attitude with her right arm akimbo while from her left hand depends a little vanity bag, her only adornment.

Why the vanity bag? Well, that is the most original touch about the whole statue, and at the same time a point against which much hostile criticism has been directed. This vanity bag is said to have annoyed Her Majesty very much.

"No one can defend a statue of a woman wearing only a vanity bag by saying that it is in the same class as the classic statues of the nude," Her Majesty is reported to have said with keen critical insight.

One sly critic has written that the statue aims to represent the idea towards which woman's costume is tending. Perhaps that was the idea in Her Majesty's mind, too; but, of course, she would not have said such a thing.

"Though the figure," writes another critic, "is that of a girl of twenty, the pose is one of quiet but provocative effrontery, and the face finely modelled, has an expression anything but virginal. It typifies vividly the twentieth century go-as-you please, pleasure-bored, 'been-there-and-back' young society woman, the quintessence of worldliness steeped in self-admiration."

The figure has the long, lose, slender limbs that are so much admired in England and that are so frequently seen in English women. Owing to the prevailing fashions in bathing suits, golf suits and other sporting costumes, one can observe these things in real life at least as well as in this statue.

The statue undoubtedly gives a good idea of a certain English upper class type of beauty, but it tends towards caricature. The limbs are too slender and delicate for young women who practise sport so vigorously. The head, however, is more lifelike.

Some admirable examples of the tall, slender type of English womanhood are the Duchess of Westminster, the Countess of Westmoreland and Lady Marjorie Manners, who recently became the Marchioness of Anglesey. They are all very original and progressive in their costumes. They have exhibited themselves as "living statuary," and in various kinds of spectacles and pageants for the entertainment of a beauty loving public. Queen Mary tried, with indifferent success, to put an end to spectacles of that kind, but whatever kind she frowned upon, the tendency was sure to break out in some new direction.

All the three beauties mentioned have denied that they are in any way represented by the statue. Having been so prominent in all sorts of artistic entertainments, and being friends of the Countess of Gleichen, it was natural that people should compare them with the curious piece of sculpture.

The head bears a marked resemblance to that of the Viscountess Curzon, a tall, graceful Englishwoman who was chosen Queen of Beauty at a revival of an ancient tournament held recently in London.

The game of guessing who posed for "The Woman of 1914" has become the chief amusement of London society. Never has art been so popular. At dinner parties the favorite subject of conversatoin is the statue. One gilded youth may be heard declaring that he is sure the Duchess of So-and So's right leg is represented by the artist, while his fair dinner companion asserts loudly that it is Lady Marjorie's limb, and "she ought to know, because they were brought up together." There is unlimited frankness about these discussions. It is significant to note that the statue is supposed to represent the woman who is ready to discuss anything.

When the exhibition opened, Queen Mary was too busy with her visit to Paris to notice what was happening. Various works of art had to be put in the cellars of Parisian public buildings and statues draped before the gay capital was fit to be seen by Her Majesty.

Having returned from that visit, the Queen was shocked to learn that her own cousin had been making nudity popular. She threatened to take away the Countess Gleichen's apartments in St. James's Palace, a step which would be difficult to carry out, as they were granted by Queen Victoria.

Queen Mary declared that any woman who posed for the statue would, when discovered be permanently banished from Court and excluded from all respectable society. "And I mean to make it my business to discover all of them," said the Queen. "A woman who would do such a thing is undermining the respect the lower classes should feel for the leaders of society and is helping to bring about a social revolution."

Her Majesty's anger was so serious that every woman under suspicion took pains to prove that she was not in the statue. The Countess Gleichen tried to quiet the storm by saying rather late and unconvincingly that she had used a professional model.

The news of all this trouble caused additional interest in the statue among the general public, art loving and otherwise. Guards were needed to keep the crowd at a respectable distance. Indignation, ridicule and admiration were variously expressed.

The figure does not always excite admiration in the middle classes. A stout grocer, having inspected it, critically remarked:

"Well, if that's a duchess, give me Mrs. Jones!"

Countess Feodora Gleichen, the sculptress, is a poor relation of royalty. Her father was Prince Victor of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, a grandson of Queen Vctorias mother by her first marriage. Prince Victor married an Englishwoman not of royal birth, and his children did not inherit his rank, but were called instead Counts and Countesses Gleichen. Queen Mary's own ancestry is somewhat similar, as she is descended on her father' side from the marriage of a royal prince with a plebeian woman.

And still Queen Mary declares with fire in her eye and an ominous shaking of the royal plumage and draperies that she will find and punish the culprits who posed in the "altogether!"

HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE

How Mankind Has Danced Itself Into World Control and High Civilization

INSTEAD of being the frivolous pastime it is regarded in some quarters, dancing has been one of the most important factors in the development of the human race, according to Dr. Louis Robinson, a well-known anthropologist.

The influence of dancing extends far back into prehistoric times, and has constantly made itself felt right down to these tango-mad days.

In prehistoric time it was the dancing savage who survived. To-day the dance contributes to a considerable extent to honest matrimonial dealing. That, in brief, is the conclusion Dr. Robinson arrives at after his research into the subject, and the evidence he advances in support of his contention is by no means unconvincing.

It is pointed out in the first place that practically every savage people spends a large part of its time in dancing. But savages are essentially lazy. They exert themselves only when necessary to procure food and save their skins from their enemies. They much prefer to lead the simple life. When food is plentiful, enemies scarce, and the elements friendly they are very apt to eat to repletion, and then spend the time between meals in philosophical reflection.

The effect of this easy life on a tribe of savages can well be imagined. Their muscles become soft and their intelligence dulled. They fall an easy prey to hostile tribes to whom fortune has been less (or more) kind in the matter of sustenance, and who have had to live by the chase. The more energetic tribe had to do something to maintain its fitness, and, according to Dr. Robinson, it resorted to dancing.

In discussing this phase of the matter he presents an imaginative picture of life in prehistoric days.

Tribe A enters into a temporary partnership with Tribe B for a mammoth hunt. They succeed in forcing one of the clumsy creatures over a precipice, and then fall upon his crushed carcass with their flint knives. The meat is soon ready for the eager savages.

Tribe A consists of dancing men, whose practice it is to dance before, during and after a feast of this kind. Tribe B, on the other hand, is of the lazy, gormandizing type. They gorge themselves on the mammoth flesh and lie around until they are in a condition again to eat.

This state of things goes on for perhaps two weeks, when a ravenous band of warriors, comprising Tribe C, is attracted by the smell of the mammoth carcass. What happens? Tribe A, lithe and active as a result of their dancing, are fully able to meet an equal number of Tribe C if it comes to a fight, or, at any rate, they are able to negotiate a safe retreat. In either event, large numbers of them survive the attack. But as for Tribe B, flabby and gorged, their survival is out of the question.

In this way, Dr. Robinson believes, dancing played an important part in the survival of the fittest of our earliest ancestors. The fact that even to-day dancing and feasting go hand in hand is merely a reversion to ty

Dancing played a prominent part, too, in the mental and moral development of man. Primitive man was a coward. The more intelligent he became, the more he feared danger.

"Here apparently," says Dr. Robinson, "was a grave bar to progress along the best and most promising lines, which were those of the mind rather than the body; for it would be the brainy savage who would be most oppressed and unnerved by awful possibilities when entering any danger zone. Yet war was a dread and almost daily necessity if he would escape extinction; and it would seem as if the cowardliness of the more intelligent and farseeing would check human progress by giving the more stupid and brutal tribes the upper hand.

"It seems to me probable that here the spirit of dancing stepped in and, by turning the sensibilities and imaginations of the best men to good account, saved the situation. We know that under the influence of passion many timid creatures and men become utterly fearless. There are few more gallant warriors than the deer in the mating season, and the same is true of sheep and other animals which have become to us personifications of timidity. Doubtless with our early forefathers it was the same. . . . Before the onset they worked themselves up into a factitious rage, or, at any rate, into that exalted emotional state that we call a fighting mood, by war dances, which often took the shape of prancing around or behind some stimulating emblem to the sound of some rub-a-dub music."

Equally interesting are the doctor's theories regarding the part played by dancing in our own time, although nowadays it is not so much the dancing itself as the dancing attire which is making its influence felt on the race.

"There have been discussions," Dr. Robinson said, "to to why clothes were first worn—whether for ornament, warmth or decency—but I think one can say without any doubt whatever that, from the first ages until now, dance clothing has been mainly decorative. Here we find an ethnical and eugenical, if not an ethical, justification of matters connected with dancing dress—or undress—which has often provoked severe criticism among very civilized people. Unhappily many social customs claiming solidarity with the worthiest aspects of our latter-day life have contributed to matrimonial fraud, comparable to the covering of rubbishy fruit with an inviting layer of 'toppers,' or even to the tendering of base coin. Without a doubt from the earliest times until now the dance has been a chief purifying agent in the marriage market—has played the part, in fact, of those market inspectors appointed to guard against adulteration.

"Little as is known of the past of the 'Piltdown Lady'—who may be said now to have won a sound social status with the honorable surname of Dawson—we may say with full confidence that before her early marriage she danced, and that she dressed for dancing. That earth-stained human fragment over which some of our anthropologists are wrangling in learned polysyllables once bobbed around."

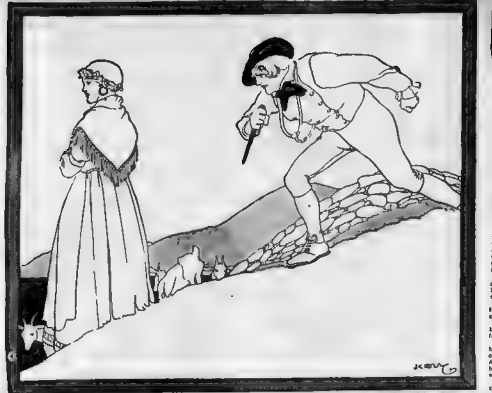
LATEST EXPLOITS OF THE NE[illegible] SCIENTIFIC DETECTIVES

A New Series of Remarkable Articles Telling How the Most Baffling Mysteries of Crime Are Solved by the Modern Criminologists

SOME months ago this newspaper published a series of remarkable articles which detailed, in the form of actual cases, the astonishing work of the scientific detectives of Europe. In response to the many requests received for more of these cases, this newspaper begins to-day a second series, which promises to be even more absorbing than the first.

It is of the men whose work will be told that William J. Burns, the most famo[illegible] American detective, wrote during the first series:

"I am[illegible]king a conservative statement when I say that the actual applicatio[illegible] real life in detective work of the methods of Professor Reiss, of the Un[illegible]sity of Lausanne; Professor Gross, of Germany, and others are often [illegible]e bewildering to the uninformed than any of the imaginary detective [illegible]k of Sherlock Holmes."



"Here the murderer crept out upon the little bride-to-be. Every unconscious sign he left behind is a little photograph of him."

The Eater of Hearts

How the Famous Dr. Marsaryk, of Vienna, Tracked Down a Superstitious Murderer by a Hair, a Wound and a Torn Page.

ON September 10 of last year, Dr. Hugo Marsaryk, the famous dean of the Austrian scientific detectives, was called upon by the Chief of Police of Vienna.

"Within the last fortnight," said the chief, "there have been a perplexing series of murders with some extraordinarily unpleasant features at the little village of Eisenfels. Will you go there and find the murderer?"

"Tell me what you know while I am getting ready," said Dr Marsaryk.

"On September 6 the body of Sophia Voltnar was found on the outskirts of the village. She had been stabbed in the throat. Sophia was a child of eight. On September 8 the body of the ten-year-old Werna Hess was found near the same spot. She also had been stabbed in the throat. On September 14 the body of Lena Schmidt was found in the woods a mile out of Eisenfels. She was eighteen years old, and death had come to her in the same way—from a stab in the throat. And I have just received a report that last night the body of Joseph Lange, a young farmer, was found in this same woods. A stab in the throat had finished him."

"Have you had any of your men there?" asked Marsaryk.

"Yes," said the chief of police, "and it is from them that I have received those unpleasant details I mentioned—details which in brutality are well-nigh incredible."

"What do you mean?" asked Dr Marsaryk sharply.

"In every instance," said the chief of police, "the murderer first stabbed his victim in the throat and had then cut open the breast. The heart had been taken from each victim."

"That is indeed extraordinary," interrupted Dr Marsaryk.

"Yes," said the chief of police, "but there is further mutilation. In the cases of the two little girls the right foot had been chopped from the body. In the cases of the young farmer the left foot had been similarly severed."

The next morning found Dr. Marsaryk at Eisenfels in conference with Father Sebastian, the priest of the village.

"We will go and look at the bodies immediately," said Dr. Marsaryk, calmly.

At that moment a breakfast was brought in. The priest apologized for its scantiness, saying

"It is meagre hospitality, but my housekeeper has not been able to cook for me to-day. Her son is ill. An infected wound of some sort, I believe. The village doctor is now with him."

"How did it occur?" asked the criminologist.

But the priest did not know, and the subject was dropped. In a few minutes Dr Marsaryk was inspecting the four bodies. The gash in the throat of each held his attention longest. These he inspected through his magnifying glass and carefully measured and photographed. Then he suddenly requested that he be shown where the bodies had been found. He was led first to the scene of the murder of Lena Schmidt. This was in the nearby woods, and within twenty feet of where the young farmer's body had been found.

"She was to have been a bride," said the priest, "the very next day, and she was carrying home her wreath and bride's finery from a town ten miles beyond Eisenfels. Nothing had been stolen from her except a silver watch worth about a crown. This was the more remarkable as she had about her some twenty crowns in money."

Then he showed where the young woman's belongings had been found scattered around her within a radius of ten to fifteen feet. Dr Marsaryk examined with the utmost care the hedge behind which the girl's body had lain. A footpath running over moss and pine needles, some twenty feet away interested him greatly. He examined it minutely with his magnifying glass.

"The man who has the watch," he said, suddenly, "is short and stocky. He limps, because his right foot is shorter than his left. And lest there are several men answering that description in Eisenfels, let me add that he is a miller."

"Impossible," cried the priest. "You are describing Friederich Waller. But he is the mildest, meekest man and would not hurt a fly. Besides, he is the man who has disappeared."

"I did not say he was the murderer, nor that he was murdered," replied Dr. Marsaryk. "He is alive. I said he had the watch, and so he has. Let me tell you just what happened. The murderer, standing here, after cutting the girl's throat, flung the box with the wreath yonder, where it was found. He slashed off such of her clothing as was in the way of making the incision into the heart. Parts of the bodice lay where you are now standing. The watch, being heavier, was flung to a greater distance. It must, by the way, have been a powerful arm that hurled the watch to that distance, for the depression in which it lay, until our friend the miller found it, is fully twenty-five or thirty feet away. Moreover, the miller, on finding it, as his footprints show, became greatly troubled. He ran hither and thither, and badly frightened he finally went off with the watch as likely as not without realizing that he still had it."

"How did you know that he limps?" inquired the priest, wonder in his eyes.

"A short foot makes a deeper impression than a normal foot," replied Dr. Marsaryk. "And he sat down to rest upon that stone, leaning his back against that huge, hollow yew tree, as I know by the bits of flour which he shed there. A person's vocation leaves unmistakable traces of his clothes. The carpenter's, metal worker's, miller's are easy recognizable."

Suddenly he stooped and picked up a bit of paper, a scrap from some book, and he stood for a long time, his hand upon a stile, his foot upon a couple of flat stones, studying it.

Then he reminded the priest, abruptly that they must go back in order to be in time for the little boy's burial service.

"But will you make no further investigations?" asked the priest in wonder.

"It's not necessary," said the criminologist. "The slayer is betrayed."

On the way back the great criminologist spoke of indifferent subjects; of the dry weather, which had impelled the authorities throughout those parts to prohibit bonfires, of the streams, which had all run dry; of the big circus, which, coming direct from Vienna, had halted also at Grassa, the large town ten miles away. Had many of the Eisenfels folks gone to the circus? Father Sebastian, amazed at such small talk, said he did not know. Smiling, Dr. Marsaryk assured him that the circus b[illegible] well worth while; some of the aerial feats h[illegible]n remarkable. Suddenly light dawned on the p[illegible]

"Ah!" he cried. "I[illegible]ink a circus rider is the murderer!"

The doctor did not [illegible]e.

But as they passed [illegible]gh the village church yard a new grave of an adu[illegible]t his eye.

Said Father Sebast[illegible] "[illegible]is is the grave of the Baroness Ohlsen, whom [illegible]uried yesterday. A young woman still, and very b[illegible]ful, she leaves a desolate husband and three small [illegible]ren."

"I take it," said the d[illegible] "that your gravediggers all work in the same wa[illegible]ook at this mound. It is worked up to a point, inst[illegible] of being low and flat, like the other new graves. Fa[illegible] Sebastian, that grave has been tampered with. I am [illegible]g to open it and exhume the body. Do you, mean[illegible], produce the baron. I must see him at once."

A half hour later the th[illegible] men, accompanied by two gravediggers, met at the [illegible]ness's grave.

When the casket was [illegible] out of the outer box Dr Masaryk pointed out blo[illegible]arks on its surface. He opened the casket himself [illegible]d the baron, at his elbow uttered a cry of horror a[illegible]age. The body had been cut, but the heart had no[illegible]een removed.

Dr Masaryk laid his h[illegible] upon the nobleman's arm.

"Compose yourself" he[illegible] "the chain of evidence is now complete. I will d[illegible]be the man who has perpetrated this horror and[illegible] I need not tell either of you is also the murder[illegible] those two children, the bride-to-be and the farme[illegible] remains for you two, who know every man in the [illegible], to locate him and tell me his name.

"He is a tall, stalwart [illegible]w at least six feet tall, is a butcher, works much in [illegible]moke-house, and has sliced off part of the middle [illegible]er of his left hand. He is blond, slim, in good [illegible] and at present he is suffering from blood poison[illegible] a peculiarly virulent type. It was caused by cutti[illegible]mself when mutilating this body."

Father Sebastian's f[illegible]ad gone ashen white

"Hannie Wohlgemu[illegible]e cried, "my housekeeper's boy? I cannot believe [illegible]t it is true he is a butcher he is all you say and ta[illegible]ering from blood poisoning"

"I am afraid it is so. [illegible]theless," said Dr Masaryk. "The unfortunate boy i[illegible]e pitied almost as much as his victims, for if not[illegible]ally insane, he has fallen prey to a horrible supe[illegible]n. He visited the circus at Grassa, and the aerial [illegible]urned his head. He burned with ambition to perf[illegible]ats that would outdistance the trapeze artists and [illegible]ed automobile riders."

"That stile that I sa[illegible]upon," said the doctor "had two elbows nailed to ea[illegible]e which added about three feet to its height, makin[illegible]resentable hurdle for a high jumper. That was the [illegible] first ambition. Then in an evil hour, he chanced [illegible]n an old 'Hexenbook'—a 'witch's book.' I do not [illegible] what that particular book, of which I found only a [illegible] scrap, contained, but I do know this: An old supe[illegible]tion teaches that the man or the woman who has eaten nine human hearts will be able to fly like a bird.

"Hannie believed this foul and wicked thing. He murdered four people, prepared the heart by roasting it between flat stones sunk in the earth, and last night, not wishing to murder more folks than was necessary, he came out here to steal the heart of the dead baroness.

"But in doing so he cut himself and the wound was infected by contact with the mutilated body. After death, decomposition creates a peculiar and deadly poison which we call cadaverin. The blood poisoning of Hannie, we will find, has been caused by this."

They went to the house of the priest's housekeeper. Hannie they found delirious and almost dead. Tests showed that Dr. Masaryk was right, and that "cadaverin" had indeed caused the infection.

The next day the boy died, but in a lucid moment before this he confessed that he had murdered the four for the exact reason the criminologist had named.

"How, Dr Masaryk," inquired the priest that night, timidly "did you know that he was a butcher, that he worked much in the smoke-house, was fair, and had a piece cut out of his finger?"

"His finger prints were on the casket" said Dr Masaryk. "They told me that a piece of his finger was missing, because the papillary lines of the middle finger of the left hand were gone. I knew he was a butcher by the way he had killed his victims. That peculiar slash into the throat is known as the 'Hammelstich'—the mutton stroke. It passes above the larynx into the throat just back of the larynx, and it requires considerable dexterity and experience to perform it in such a way that the butchered animal—it is not intended for human beings, of course—bleeds to death. Almost all the blood is drained out of the body in this way very easily. We have collected and classified, I may say, every type of knife-wound known.

"I knew he worked in a smoke-house because the hair I found yonder, where he had tossed his cap, and which also told me he was fair, showed a peculiar, loose, unhealthy, inflated structure which is caused only by an undue amount of grease in the owner's surroundings. The roots of the hair, however, showed no unusual amount of sebum, the oil which feeds the hair. Knowing that he was a butcher, it was easy to see where he had collected this unusual amount of grease which is breaking and ruining his fine fair hair. I think I have answered all your questions, father."

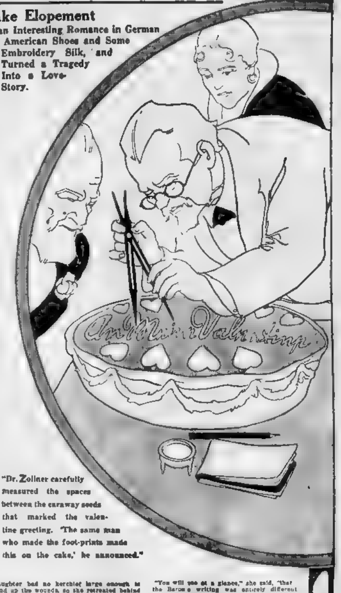
"I should like to ask you a few," said the baron. "Why did he cut off the feet?"

"Undoubtedly," replied the criminologist, "because, being a highly superstitious boy, he believed also that the ghost of the dead person could not appear to any one, or wander away from its grave, if any of its bones were missing. This is a very ancient superstition. A foot is a very necessary member of locomotion. So he removed one from each of his victims."

So ended one of the weirdest and most shocking mysteries ever brought before the attention of the scientific detectives.

The Caraway Cake Elopement

How Dr. Zollner, of Berlin, Revealed an Interesting Romance in German High Society by a Foot-Print Made by American Shoes and Some Embroidery Silk, and Turned a Tragedy Into a Love-Story.



"Dr. Zollner carefully measured the spaces between the caraway seeds that marked the valentine greeting. 'The same man who made the foot-prints made this on the cake,' he announced."

DR. WALTHER ZOLLNER, one of the famous German scientific detectives, jumped alertly from the automobile in which he had rushed from Dantzig to Zoppot, whence he had been summoned by Count von Dordelzorn. He found both the Count and Countess pacing the veranda of their beautiful country home, which overlooks the beach.

"Our only daughter, Wilhelmina," said the Count "disappeared last night. At four in the afternoon she went for a walk along the beach. It is not unusual for us, during a mild Winter to spend a few days each month here at the beach, in our Summer home, for both my wife and daughter passionately love the sea air. And as Wilhelmina is anaemic, a few days here do her a world of good.

"A negro was seen lurking about the beach in the morning, and I cautioned my daughter against walking out alone. She promised to keep near the house. That was at four o'clock in the afternoon. Since then no one has seen her. There is a small wood at the extreme southern end of my estate, just where my ground adjoins the public road. It is separated from the public thoroughfare by a barbed wire fence. Near this fence a small pool of blood was found."

The pool of blood in the tiny wood the criminologist seemed to find perplexing. Down on his knees he went, at least six feet away from the now dry blood, to which the distracted father pointed, and, whipping a microscope from his pocket, closely scrutinized every inch of the ground within a radius of six or seven feet from the tiny pool.

"At least a dozen people have tramped over this bit of ground," he said. "I can make nothing of it. Let me see what the footpath yonder, approaching the pool of blood, will tell me." He subjected the path indicated to the same minute examination which he had bestowed upon the other ground. Suddenly he rose to his feet.

"See what I have found," he cried, almost gayly. "Can you identify it?"

"It is a piece of embroidery from my daughter's petticoat," the Countess gasped.

To the consternation of the Count, Dr. Zollner laughed, and, again getting down on his knees, examined the narrow footpath between fence and pool. Then he examined the barbed wire fence, and with his penknife scraped up what seemed like a bit of rust. He put this bit of rust upon a square inch of glass, and then, having carefully cleaned his knife, he took up a little of the dry blood where it had dripped into a pool. He placed this between similar bits of glass.

They then returned to the house, and Dr Zollner took from his valise two small vials half filled with a liquid. Placing the vials on the table before him, he opened the squares of glass and dropped a bit of the dry blood into one. Into the other he dropped the rust speck. The two liquids became cloudy, and the contents of the vials seemed to rise slightly.

Dr. Zollner gave a sigh of satisfaction.

"Count," he said. "Your daughter has not been kidnapped. She has eloped with a man of whom she seems uncommonly fond. He is six feet tall, was formerly an officer in the German army, and has just returned from America."

The Count became greatly excited.

"I will not believe it!" he exclaimed. "That negro stole her away!"

"There was no negro," Dr. Zollner replied. "It is true that the footprints of the black you saw on the beach and the footprints along the path in the woods beside those of your daughter are the same. They tell me, though, a very different story than that you suspect. All occupations modify the walk of those practising them.

"These footprints show unmistakably, by the length of the stride and their angle, that they were made by some one who had served as an officer in the German army. We know no negro can so serve.

"And, again, I know he was a white man, because I applied the Uhlenhuth blood test, which enables us to tell whether the blood under examination is a white's, negro's, a yellow, a brown or a red man's. The cloudiness showed me white it was."

"But the blood—the blood may have been my daughter's, and not the man's," objected the Count weakly.

"Impossible!" said Dr. Zollner. "You told me your daughter was anaemic. I have not all my instruments for testing blood with me, but my cursory examination of the blood with a microscope told me that it was surcharged with haemoglobin, which, you will recall, is the red coloring matter of the blood. The footprints were made by American shoes. And so I know that the German officer has recently returned from America. Very recently, as the haemoglobin tells, because the unusual proportion of red corpuscles shows he has just been at sea.

"Now let me tell you what else the footprints tell me. After the young man cut himself on the barbed wire fence, he went back and sat down on a stone. Your daughter had no kerchief large enough to bind up the wounds, so she retreated behind the big tree and tore her petticoat into strips. Witness the bit of embroidery. She made a tourniquet and broke innumerable dry twigs trying to twist this in order to stop the flow of blood from the artery. Finally she used his fountain pen. How do I know? Because I saw the twigs, and mixed with the blood were ink spots. Finally, they motored away. But his arm must have been in bad condition, and unless he had a chauffeur with him they could not have gone far. Have you any idea as to who the young man is?"

"Yes," said the Count, looking very miserable. "We have. Both my wife and myself thought that Wilhelmina had completely broken with a young man of whom we disapproved thoroughly. Although of the best blood and heir to a big fortune when his uncle dies, von Urx is a spendthrift, a gambler, a ne'er-do-well. I know that my daughter and he have not corresponded. I thought she had forgotten him. He went to America, it is true, after we forced a rupture between them."

"And now he has returned. And in some way communicated with her. Let me see: to-day is February 16. Your daughter disappeared on the 15th. The 14th was St. Valentine's Day. Countess, I would like to see the valentines which Comtesse Wilhelmina received."

Said the Countess. "Wilhelmina received no valentine except a cake."

"A cake!" exclaimed Dr Zollner. "I admit I was not prepared for that. Do not tell me that the cake has been eaten."

"The cake is in Wilhelmina's room," she said. "I will send for it."

"I would prefer going to her room," said Dr. Zollner. "Wasn't it unusual to take a cake to her bedroom?"

"She seemed to think some joke was baked into it and wanted to examine it with her hatpin."

But the cake showed no signs of being pierced by a hatpin. It was a layer cake, with white icing, on which was lettered in caraway seeds as many hued as the rainbow: "To my Valentine."

"I would like to see a specimen of Baron von Urx's writing, if possible," said Dr. Zollner.

The Countess drew a small package of letters out of her daughter's writing-desk.

"You will see at a glance," she said, "that the Baron's writing was entirely different from the writing on the cake."

Dr Zollner did not answer. He was busy with a small instrument, a sort of combination ruler and circle, with which he began rapidly making all sorts of measurements on the words "to" and "my" on the cake. Then asking the Countess to find him one or both of those two words in the letters, he began making measurements on them.

"And what have we here?" he cried, pulling out a piece of cardboard, upon which the letters were strapped with a rubber band.

It was nothing but a specimen card of colored embroidery silks, but Dr Zollner became very much engrossed in it. Placing the card beside the cake, he filled in sheet after sheet with disjointed letters. Suddenly he looked up.

"The case is now clear," he said. "At that last interview the Fraulein promised to marry the Baron if he would give her an earnest of his intention to reform. Meanwhile she kept her promise not to write him. This color card of silks was a sign agreed upon by them. The shades of green—five you will observe—represent the vowels. Here the yellows are the sibilants, the reds the labials, and so on. That lettering on the cake, in cipher, read: 'Meet me to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock. Am successful merchant now. Do not fail me. Expect you to marry me off-hand.'"

"It seems to me this is far-fetched," said the Count. "The writing is not the Baron's."

"Pardon me, it is. This little instrument was designed by Dr W. Langenbruch, of Berlin, for the detection of forgeries in writing. Given any one word, the distances between certain points of the initial and final letter will always be the same, whether the writing is natural or planned to deceive. The measurements correspond in the writing of the letters and of the cake."

Just then a footman entered with a note, addressed to the Count. It read:

"Dear Father and Mother—Do please forgive me for eloping with Eric von Urx. He is now a merchant in New York and has turned over a new leaf. We had a bad accident—at least he did—and were forced to remain right in the village at the Inn of the Three Golden Hoofs. Hearing of your anxiety just now, I decided to write you where I am. Forgive me and come to your daughter,

"WILHELMINA VON URX."

A Weird New Beardsley Who Makes Poe's Weirdest Stories Live Again in Pictures of Horror

A WORLD-WIDE movement is under way to do honor to the memory of Edgar Allan Poe, the American who, as poet and short story writer, had no superior in the world.

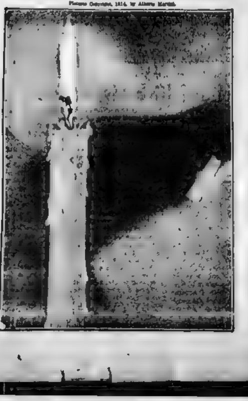
His cottage in New York, where he wrote "Annabel Lee" and other poems and stories, has at last been placed in a park and established by the city as a Poe Museum. It had undergone much indignity and ill treatment, and had several times been in danger of complete destruction. In London it is proposed to place a tablet on the school where he spent several unhappy years of his youth. Europe, it is to be noted, honors the genius of Poe fully as much as his native America.

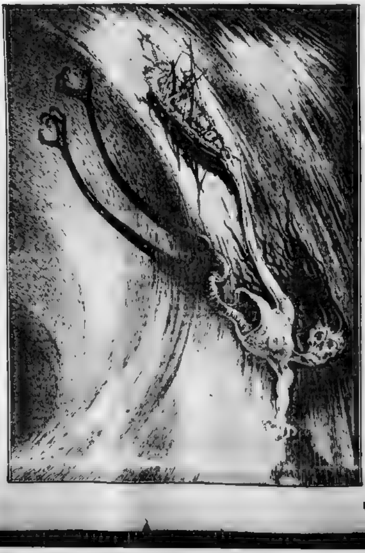
In connection with this revival of interest in Poe, a brilliant Italian artist, Alberto Martini, has held a remarkable exhibition of pen and ink drawings, illustrating the author's works at the Goupil Galleries, No. [illegible] Bedford street, Strand, London.

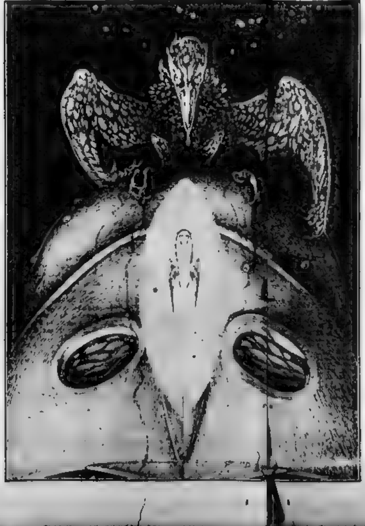
Signor Martini has been declared by critics to be an imaginative artist rivalling the talented Aubrey Beardsley. In the horror-inspiring element and the fascinating grotesquerie of his drawings there is much in Martini's work that may be compared with Beardsley. In realism and dramatic power, however, the Italian must be regarded as surpassing the Englishman.

Below Is Signor Martini's Remarkable Pictorial Version of Poe's "Angel of the Odd," and at the Right, His Conception of "The Maelstrom."

Pictures Copyright, 1914, by Alberto Martini.







Among the most remarkable drawings of Martini are "The Raven" "The Maelstrom" "The Pit and the Pendulum" and "The Angel of the Odd," all of which are reproduced on this page.

The illustration of "The Raven" will interest many, because that is the most familiar of Poe's poems. Study this picture of the fatal bird that

"Perched upon a bust of Pallas, just above my chamber door—Perched, and sat, and nothing more."

There are some strangely fantastic touches in the picture. The raven is dripping drops from his beak, doubtless an interpretation of the lines

"Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!
Quoth the raven—Nevermore."

Then there is the little figure of a woman before the bust, which may be taken to illustrate the lines

"And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor, Shall be lifted—Nevermore!"

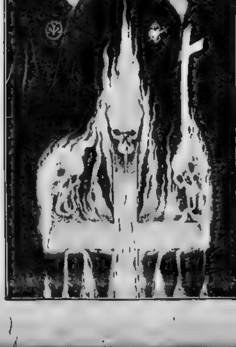
An interesting example of Signor Martini's work is the drawing of "The Maelstrom." The fantastic monstrous half female figure that drags the ship to destruction is in his most grotesque imaginative style. On the other hand, the drawing of the water shows his realistic quality. The motion of the water as it flies round in its deadly vortex can almost be felt.

Below Is Signor Martini's Curious Idea of Poe's Famous "Pit and the Pendulum," and at the Left His Strikingly Original Visualization of the Familiar Poem, "The Raven."



How Billy Sunday Brings Sinners to Repentance.

The Popular Evangelist, Who Preaches in Slang, and Uses the Phrases of Prize Ring and Bar Room to Describe the Happenings of Sacred History, but Seems to Get Results

One of the Features of the Great Miners' Parade in Scranton, Held to Celebrate the Success of Sunday's Revival There.

THE preaching of Billy Sunday is now the greatest subject of discussion among the churches. It is admitted that the churches are not attracting the people as they ought to but Billy Sunday gets them.

Every time Billy Sunday holds a revival meeting he draws crowds so large that churches and halls will not hold them, and the police have to be called to keep them from overcrowding the buildings.

As a result of his eight weeks' campaign in Pittsburg, a city greatly troubled with vice and disorder, the most remarkable results were obtained. The Cambria Steel Company, one of the greatest manufacturing concerns in the country, established a religious department at its plant, with a regular minister; department stores in the city organized morning prayer meeting and Bible classes for their employes; the newspapers made Sunday's sermons their leading feature.

In Scranton a poker club of wealthy business men gave up cards and started a Bible class in a disused garage.

"Profanity decreased in the big plants; sobriety made for a higher and steadier output; the new religious motive generated ambition and self-respect. Industry takes off its hat to Billy Sunday," writes the Rev. J. H. Odell, of Scranton.

Complaints were made that the students of the University of Pennsylvania were becoming addicted to drinking and dissipated living. Billy Sunday held a series of meetings there and the young men became regular church attendants and at the same time better students.

The Rev. Dr. Maitland Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Pittsburg, who, although head of a fashionable congregation, is a warm supporter of Sunday, says that he practically put the saloons out of business in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, which are in the mining districts and have been cursed by drunkenness.

How does Billy Sunday do it? He attacks the most evident evils and sins of the day and he attacks them in language that everybody understands. He uses common, violent slang in his denunciations of drinking. He uses phrases of the prize ring and barroom to describe the events of sacred history. He was formerly a professional baseball player, and the mildest of his similes are borrowed from baseball.

Many ministers have criticised him, complaining that his methods are vulgar and that the people converted by them do not stay converted. Sunday has spoken of these ministers as "grafters and stiffs who talk bum bull con."

Here are a few typical examples of the startling manner in which Billy Sunday paraphrases the events of sacred history:

"An oath was binding in the olden days. When Daniel found a bunch of cut-throats trying to put their hands in the public trough he fought them to a finish. They wanted to get him out of the way and they inveigled the King into making a law that anyone who should refuse to worship him as God should be cast into a den of lions for thirty days. Daniel still prayed to his own God, and he was thrown into the den.

"When the King found that the gang had worked a shell game on him, he wanted to get Daniel out of the den, but he swore by the law of the Medes and Persians that he would do as he promised. He couldn't get around the oath. You can't tell me that you can raise a dead level to a perpendicular * * *

"Herod got a bunch of high-rollers around him. They were all soused, carrying loads like battleships. Young Salome wiggled around the bunch, stuck her foot out at quarter of twelve, and got the crowd going. I can imagine the cries of that drunken old lobster, and then he said: 'Sis, you're a peach; I'll give you anything you want, even if it is half of my kingdom; that was a great stunt of yours—what will you have?' And the girl hiked off to her old God-forsaken licentious mother, and told her of the offer Herod had made. She told the girl to get the head of John the Baptist, who had called her down for infidelity. He made her mad. The girl went back to the drunken old man. She told him what she wanted. He turned pale. He tried to save John, but he couldn't for his oath's sake."

The vigor of his language, his slang, the similes, that appeal to the simplest minds, all combine to awaken the interest and arouse the emotions of his hearers. After such picturesque but slangy passages as those just quoted he will make an observation showing real spiritual insight, like the following:

"The personality, the divinity and the attributes of the Holy Ghost afford one of the most inspiring, one of the most beneficial examples in our spiritual life. We are told that when the Holy Spirit came to Pentecost, he came as the rushing of a mighty wind and over-urging expectancy. When Jesus was baptized in the River Jordan, of John, out from the expanse of heaven was seen to float the Spirit of God like a snowflake, and they heard a sound as of whirling wings, and the Holy Spirit, in the form of a dove, hovered over the dripping locks of Christ. Neither your eyes nor mine will ever behold such a scene; neither will our ears ever hear such a sound again. You cannot dissect or weigh the Holy Spirit, nor analyze him as a chemist may analyze material matter in his laboratory, but we can all feel the pulsing of the breath of His eternal love."

Sunday has a keen sense of humor, and an understanding of simple human nature that helps greatly to enforce his moral lessons.

"A young girl," he said, "will make goo-goo eyes at every fellow who has the price of a joy-ride or an ice cream soda, until she centers her affections on one, and says 'Yes' to his appeal. Then she becomes his wife, and when she feels the frail robe of maternity around her sholders she will live just for one, for the oath's sake. She is true to him. Whatever a person publicly promises, he will accomplish if he is decent. If you can't be a Christian, disown the name; if you can't be a husband, disown the name."

Sunday's strongest attacks are made upon drink, and his most evident successes have been made in promoting temperance in the communities where he has preached.

The whole attitude of Sunday toward drink can be summed up in his nine words: "Christianity and whiskey can't stay in the same skin together."

He makes his attacks on drink most effective by his heart-stirring pictures of the suffering it causes to innocent women and children. For example:

"I occasionally hear a man say, 'It's nobody's business how I live.' Then I say he is the most dirty, low-down, stinking, whiskey-soaked, beer-guzzling, bull-necked, foul-mouthed hypocrite that ever had a brain rotten enough to conceive such a statement and lips vile enough to utter it. 'It's nobody's business how I live.' You say if I am satisfied with my life why do you want to interfere with my personal liberty?' It's everybody's business.

"If I heard a man beating his wife and heard her shrieks and the children's cries, and my wife would tell me to go and see what was the matter, and I went in and found a great big, broad shouldered, whiskey-soaked, hog-jowled, weasel-eyed ruffian dragging a little woman around by the hair and two children in the corner unconscious from his kicks, and the others yelling in abject terror, and he said, 'What are you coming in to interfere with my personal liberty for? Isn't this my wife, didn't I pay for the license to wed her?' You ought, or you're a bigamist. 'Aren't these my children, didn't I pay the doctor to bring them into the world?' You ought to or you're a thief. 'If I want to beat them, what is that your business, aren't they mine?' Would I apologize? Never! I'd knock seven kinds of pork out of that old hog."

Billy Sunday's version of the supreme tragedy of the Christian religion will doubtless shock many people, but it was very effective in converting rough men.

"If we had been there we might have seen the hill-tops and the tree tops filled and covered with angels, and houses crowded as Jesus hung on the cross and cried: 'I thirst,' and a man ran and dipped a sponge in wormwood and gall and vinegar, and put it on a reed and put it up to his lips. Then Jesus cried: 'My God, why hast thou forsaken me?' There he hung, feeling the burden of your guilt, you booze fighter, you libertine, you dead-beat.

"'My God, hast thou forsaken me?' he cried, and I imagine that the archangel cried: 'O, Jesus, if you want me to come and sweep the howling, blood-thirsty mob into hell, lift your heart and look me in the face, and I will come.' But Jesus gritted his teeth and struggled on, and the archangel again cried: 'O, Jesus, if you want me to come, tear your right hand loose from the cross and wave it; I will come.' But Jesus just clenched his fist over the nails. What for? To keep you out of hell. Then tell me why you are indifferent. And soon he cried: 'It is finished.' The Holy Spirit plucked the olive branch of peace back through the gates of heaven from the cross and winged his way and cried, 'Peace! Peace! has been made by his death on the cross.' That is what he had to do. That was his duty."

At the conclusion of this passage the whole audience was in paroxysms of tears and violent emotion. The most hardened drinkers and ill-doers loudly cried that they would give up drink and all their wicked ways and become earnest Christians. Hundreds of them also gave up their jewelry and everything of value they had with them to the preacher.

This will show the lively manner in which Billy Sunday dealt with the sin of swearing:

"I have sometimes imagined that young fellow in Luke 15. He came to his father and said, 'Dig up. I'm tired of this and want to see the world.' His father didn't know what he meant. 'Come across with the mazuma, come clean, divvy. I want the coin, see?' Finally, the father tumbled, and he said: 'I got you' and he divided up his share and gave it to the young man. Then he goes down to Babylon and starts out on a sporting life. He meets the young blood and the gay dame. I can imagine that young fellow the first time he swore. If his mother had been near he would have looked at her and blushed rose red. But he thought he had to cuss to be a man.

"No man can be a good husband, no man can be a good father, no man can be a respectable citizen, no man can be a gentleman, and swear. You can hang out a sign of gentleman, but when you cuss you might as well take it in."

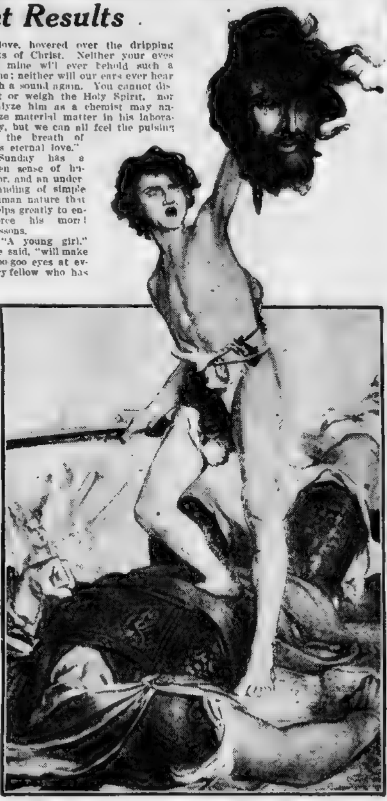
Here are some examples of Billy Sunday's homely philosophy extracted from his latest sermons:

"One trouble with this country is we are making money by bucketsful, but going to hell in carload lots on excursion rates."

"You say you don't believe in revivals. Neither does the devil."

"If good preaching would save Scranton, the angels in heaven would have been singing long ago."

"Too much of the preaching to-day is too pretty, too dainty, too polite."



The Heroic Old Testament Episode of David—And The Uncommonly Unconventional Way Billy Sunday Paints It in Words in One of His Sermons.

"All of the sons of Jesse except David went off to war; they left David at home because he was only a kid. After awhile David's ma got worried. She wondered what had become of his brothers, because they hadn't telephoned to her or sent word. So she said to David, 'Dave, you go down there and see whether they are all right.'

"So David pikes off to where the war is, and the first morning he was there out comes this big Goliath, a big, strapping fellow about 11 feet tall, who commenced to shoot off his mouth as to what he was going to do.

"'Who's that big stiff putting up that game talk?' asked David of his brothers.

"'Oh, he's the whole works: he's the head cheese of the Philistines. He does that little stunt every day.'

"'Say, said David, 'you guys make me sick. Why don't some of you go out and soak that guy? You let him get away with that stuff.' He decided to go out and tell Goliath where to head in.

"So Saul said: 'You'd better take my armor and sword.' David put them on, but he left like a fellow with a hand-me-down suit about four times too big for him, so he took them off and went down to the brook and picked up a half dozen stones. He put one of them in his sling, threw it, and soaked Goliath in the coco between the lamps, and he went down for the count. David drew his sword and chopped off his block, and the rest of the gang beat it."

What the Stars Promise of Good and Evil for the Month of June

THE stars ruling June affairs work under a somewhat restrictive condition, with Saturn as the ruler of their figure, and Neptune and Mars sitting in a negative attitude in the house of diplomacy and foreign relationships.

The scheme of the heavens is not adverse to our interests, but affairs of state are going to be difficult of adjustment. The President wields a conservative and magnetic influence, as here countenanced by Venus, but the crux of the situation resolves itself into Cabinet difficulties, with the Prime Secretary—if Bryan can be so designated—approaching nearer the war cloud indicated in the previous forecast. Lectures and statecraft do not necessarily go hand in hand, and Mr. Bryan is unfortunate in his astral entourage, implying no fault of his own. The War Secretary will reap criticism as well, with Mars in opposition to Uranus; he will commit some contretemp or be enmeshed in some contractual arrangement that will reflect upon the efficiency of the service.

This horoscope is a mixture of belligerency and conservatism as regards Mexico, but with easy progress in connection with foreign government, despite the fact that Neptune in that quarter tends to chicanery, conspiracy and intrigue as factors against the integrity of the Monroe Doctrine and the continental dominancy of this Republic. If we haven't gone into Mexico proper—which is a very probable situation ere the close of June—neither will we have gone out of it. The stars show that the march of progress goes to the Isthmus.

Conversely, the money interests gain some peculiar advantage, with that house excellently fortified by position and aspect; Jupiter holds sway with a good ray from Saturn and Venus, and Uranus likewise to Mercury. Sudden and unexpected spurts in the share market may be looked for, but with temporary reactions due to war rumors and complications that will just as quickly manifest, especially around the 12th, 13th, 18th and close of the month, with an upward tendency in the first eleven days, again between the 14th and 16th inclusive. As a whole, I look for some higher quotations in June, but with a break and a slump near the 13th.

Interstate affairs are nicely conditioned, labor problems are quiescent, but a brooding mood surrounds them; there is storm hovering over the United States in this latter respect, but the time for the great tempest is not yet.

A very doubtful health period exists hereabouts; epidemic disease may be expected, ptomanic and otherwise, largely with the female class, with very many instances of dereliction in the servant quarter, suicides, also with self-evident instance of coalition with the criminal quarter, with immunity with the director of the latter and unpleasant involvement for the unfortunate servants. This is because of Venus in conjunction with Saturn in that quarter of the monthly horoscope.

The weather promises better for the early than the latter half of June. There is a storm centre near the 12th, with lowered temperature and increased area of moisture, excess precipitation or humidity that sweeps its way across the country. This will create not a little atmospheric disturbance in the middle West, with Mars in opposition to Jupiter, and volcanic activity will be reported from various sections of the world as well as within our own borders. Near the 21st comes the greatest instance of this, both atmospheric and telluric, and considerable destruction of life and property, inland and coastwise, will be the burden of telegraphic and wireless messages.

The further West is astrologically as well as obviously much more disturbed than the Eastern States, economically and industrially, but with Washington as the Governmental point of activity. These longitudes extend through the South and Mexico as regards area, and bloody influences pervade the territory covered; the Texas border will be more disturbed. But the atmospheric phenomena referred to will lie between Paducah and Memphis, if not a little farther south.

A few special incidents occur on or near the following dates:

June 1-4—A legal proceeding that troubles Eastern railroads, with prejudice to the reputation of officials or directors; a social scandal around the 4th, more probable in Middle or Southern States.

June 5-6—A bequest of charitable importance announced; also a social engagement. Interesting developments in the amusement world at this period.

June 7-8—Ozoniferous atmosphere, with northwest winds and of consequent value to prospective crops, though the Summer will not bear out those pleasant agricultural auguries.

June 12-13—A very disturbed condition, atmospherically, seismically and industrially. Look for a bank failure at this time and excitement in money centres. The national exchequer will be drawn upon by official request or legislative enactment; this will concern the War rather than the Navy Department. The procedure lasts into the 15th for final aproval.

June 15-17—Unusual activity in war methods, a concerted movement of troops. The weather rather tempestuous around the 16th, and military flotillas had well take warning, as gulf storms will be in evidence, also around Hatteras.

June 18-19—Some diplomatic negotiations favorably dispensed, some amicable arrangement with a foreign power, whether the commonalty be aware of the fact or not. A seasonable temperature mentally and atmospherically.

The last week of the month is much disturbed in more ways than one, great humidity indicated by the hygrometer, a falling barometer in the western sections, always a forerunner of a storm area, which is just as likely as not to pass from the Mississippi Valley into the further Eastern States, in which latter section the death-rate will be much emphasized and the social atmosphere not of a desirable hue. A naval mishap, not improbable in these latter days, with a calamity to aerial navigation.

Saturn prevails this month in the lives of those born in 1848, Summer of 1855, in 1862, Summer of 1870, Winter of 1878, last half of 1884, Spring of 1885, Fall of 1891, Spring and Fall of 1899 and in 1907; a cloud throws its shadow, and a depression in the physical and magnetic conditions will obtain. Needless to say that aggressive effort should be avoided and the health safeguarded. The same applies if born in the second week of March or June, or near the middle of September or December of any year.

Jupiter sits beneficently if born around the 12-16 of February, April, June, October or December of any year, or in the Spring of 1853, Winters of 1[illegible] 1857 and 1859, in the Fall of 1860 and Winter of 1861, [illegible] and Summer of 1863, in 1865, Winters of 1867, [illegible] 1871, in 1875, Summers of 1877 and 1882, Winters of 1883 and 1890, Summers of 1894 and 1896 and Fall of 1898; optimistic and enterprising, promotion of interests and new and valuable connections.

The first week does not afford very good anniversaries, the second and third weeks very pleasant in prospective. Very erratic and unsettled if born in the early part of February or August, losses if born around the 12th-13th, litigation and domestic upheavals for opposite sex if born in last week of month, with business reverses for those so engaged.

Just Why Your HEAD ACHES

The Pain Is Nature's Way of Warning You That Somewhere in Your Body There Is Trouble

TO explain many of the causes for headaches is an easy matter. To explain the causes for constant or periodic headaches in certain individuals is not so easy for the doctor.

What is meant is this—that the physician with the highest mentality and the best of education cannot through laboratory knowledge know the individual, and it is knowing the individual that counts in matters like a headache

A year or so ago one of the most brilliant men in this country died in the most noted hospital in this country He had suffered from severe headaches at times; finally they occurred with such frequency and force that the man became practically insane. The autopsy showed a brain tumor It was this tumor pressing upon the brain which caused the headaches. This was all the doctors said

But what caused the tumor? This is the important thing to have known. Had the man gone back many years in his life and told any good doctor the truth; had his family physician known about the patient's early life, the growth of the tumor could have been stopped. Right here we see the uselessness of any patient getting the best out of a doctor unless he tells the whole truth.

A headache means something is wrong with your body—something wrong with the chemistry of the organs and tissues. You know if you receive a blow on the head that the aching is due to the blow and will ordinarily pass away. But if you have severe headaches for which you cannot account, you go and poison yourself with all kinds of dangerous and injurious drugs. You have not been taught that the brain has received some kind of inward blow due to blood poisoned by gases or materials which have not left the body through the natural channels—the skin, the lungs, kidneys, liver, intestines. This condition is the cause of most headaches.

Approaching kidney trouble is generally ushered in by headaches. An examination will settle this question for you. Abscesses of the inner ear, abscesses hidden in the roots of the teeth, strained eyes, will all bring on headaches. Worry, rage, jealousy will through the disturbance of secreting organs cause headaches. If a man in a rage secretes poison so virulent that it will poison anyone he happens to bite, cannot you see how this poison will give a physiological blow to the delicate brain and cause a headache?

You may have hanging on to you remnants of poisons left from certain diseases—malaria, typhoid, or in a traveler, jungle fever or bush chills. You think all the poison is out of your system, but mental and physical fatigue weakens your resisting forces and the poison again temporarily takes hold

The headache is a sign hung out for you to heed—no matter what it means: LOOK, LISTEN and SEARCH. It is not necessary that you should have dissipated in the ordinary meaning to have a raging headache. You can be the most exemplary sort of an individual and dissipate. When you become overexcited and rush your meals; when you get into a violent dispute at a woman's club or over a teacup scandal and the blood rushes to your face and you sit down to any kind of a meal in this condition, you are dissipating in the true meaning of the word. Of course, you will have a headache in the morning, and if you take powders or tablets for such a headache you will soon have the drug habit fastened upon you.

In each of us reside some qualities of the opposite sex. The love of art, music, poetry, in the male is only an evidence of an excess of female elements which resided in the germ plasm. The love of politics, shooting, masculine sports in the female are evidences of the same condition inborn in the woman. Now both these qualities when carried only to the extent of producing useful things, art or health, are normal states Of course, when nature takes to making what biologists call "sports"—the effeminate man and the masculine woman—we have the most disgusting of living things

But just as man may have feminine—not effeminate remember this—ideals in art or music, he may also have some remnant of physiological femaleness. In this case, when tired or overworked, there may be periodical headaches. Sometimes a man of peculiar temperament will have a headache during the height of every full moon

A headache that is worse on rising in the morning and gradually goes away during the day is suspicious. It probably means a brain tumor. A headache which increases in severity toward evening, especially if it continues throughout the night, is apt to be of malarial origin, or at least of a germ origin It is a very important matter, and should never be neglected. A Wasserman blood test will determine the question. If it is due to a parasite in the blood, and if not at once treated the result is disastrous to brain existence

A headache coming on regularly in the evening or afternoon, and if when you lie down the pain increases and there is a steady throbbing over the region of the eyes, is probably due to inflammation or a small abscess in the bone cavities of the upper portion of the nose. The cause of the increase of the pain when you lie down is due to the fact that the mucus or pus cannot leave the nose as it can when you are upright. The retention of this material brings a pressure upon the sensitive nerves, and hence the increase of pain.

Headaches that seem to have no particular spot upon which you can place your finger are generally of a nervous origin. These need careful investigation by doctor and dentist.

Why ILLNESSES COME BACK

THE most important—and perhaps also the most difficult—of the problems that deal with health is that which treats of the resistance or the lack of resistance of the body to disease. Certain people seem to be immune to certain diseases. To certain diseases every one can be made immune. Whatever may be the opinion as to the advisability of wholesale vaccination, no one will dispute that the death from smallpox in a well-vaccinated community is only a fraction of the dath rate in a neighborhood where no one has been vaccinated. The United States army has shown that it is possible to render large bodies of men practically immune to typhoid fever.

But the line of treatment which these two represent has recently taken on quite a new phase. In the reports of recent serum experiments much trouble is announced from anaphylaxis, which is a curious condition in which the body does not become immune, but becomes very susceptible to infection. So harmless a substance as milk, for example, if injected into the vein in a very small dose, and allowed to remain undisturbed for months, will set up a condition in the blood which passes entirely without notice until a second injection of milk be given, when symptoms of an alarming sort show themselves, so seriously, indeed, that the patient may die. Nothing more amazing than this has ever been found in the study of the human body—that the very condition which in some cases will give immunity from disease will, in other cases, provoke the same disease. The laboratories of the world are working feverishly on this problem, and the literature on anaphylaxis is pouring out on every hand

One of the possible developments of work in this regard is that certain illnesses, such as hay fever and asthma, for example, which come back regularly at certain seasons of the year, may be due to this anaphylixis condition

Where Girls Are BETROTHED While Still in Their CRADLES

RECENT explorations in New Guinea have brought to light many interesting facts concerning the life and customs of its people. Sorcery still prevails to a large extent. In the wilder parts of the country the chief is himself a head sorcerer. He claims to be able to separate his spirit from his body, and to send it on various missions, including that of killing people.

Recently a number of sorcerers went by night to the house of a native, on whom they cast a spell by pointing at him a human bone. They afterward murdered their victim, and after his burial dug up the corpse, eating portions of the body for the purpose of sorcery.

In one district near Daru it is the custom to brand, by means of a mark on the shoulder or breast, girl babies with the mark of the man they are subsequently to marry.

Cannibalism stil exists in New Guinea It is the custom to cut off the head, arms and legs of the bodies of the victims, the most prized morsel for the purposes of cannibalism being the legs.

One of the most curious movements that has recently been brought to light prevails along the northeastern coast. It is known as the Baigona movement, and, although only eighteen months old, has spread with great rapidity. By its operations, which almost approach sorcery, and are, therefore, being carefully watched by the government, great respect is paid to snakes, none of which is allowed to be killed

In some of the western districts the houses contain great collections of skulls which belonged to enemies killed in battle, to which artificial wooden noses are attached, which makes them very grotesque, while those belonging to relatives remain untouched.

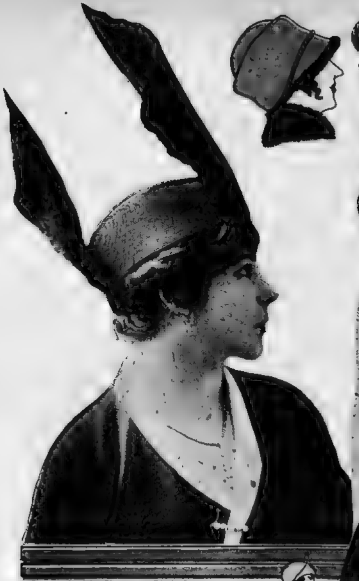
UP AND DOWN HATS.

Last Minute Fashions on the Boulevards Described by Lady Duff-Gordon.

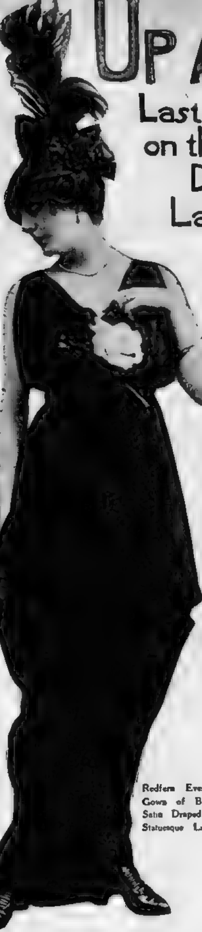
LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

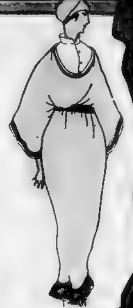
Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York City



Fore and Aft Chapeau. Black Liseret Straw with Quill Trimming, Created by the Maison Amelie.



Redfern Evening Gown of Black Satin Draped in Statuesque Lines



By Lady Duff-Gordon

HATS, hats, everywhere, but so few of them I feel like wearing! A morning walk on the boulevards, in this lovely Spring weather, brings out almost as many hats as people! There are the shiny Liseret hats in black, blue, green and yellow, there are tuscans, leghorns and milans There are plain straws and twisted straws and flowers! Ye gods! it is impossible to supply the demand.

So impressed have I been with these last minute hats that I selected four, at random, to send to you. Two of them are by Lewis, and the other two by Amelie. You see that the trimming either stands up a foot or more, or else hangs down from the under side of the brim. It is an up and down season, you see.

By way of contrast I am sending you a Redfern costume which appeals very greatly to me. The lines are gracious and matronly, and the draping is particularly effective.

And now I am going to say "I told you so!" again I simply can't help it, and, really, under these particular circumstances, it is not nearly so odious a remark, as it can be—and generally is! For the happening I foretold is such a pleasant one that you should all be glad it has thus "come true," and that the coats you are going to wear in the Spring will flare outward in the manner already made familiar by the "lamp-shade" tunic, and in this way, also, proved to be most becoming.

Only the new style of silhouette will be still more striking, because the coats will be much longer than the tunics, and their fabrics, too, so much more substantial Moreover, they will frequently—and, indeed, generally—be deeply bordered and weighted with fur, and, altogether, will give their wearers a most imposing appearance—and width—to the knees, that is!

But after that they will taper away to a mere nothing, or should do so, if nature has been kind instead of generous in the matter of ankle measurements! Certainly there will not be a superfluous half inch of fabric, so far as the skirts are concerned, these being cut in a way which pays the flattery of closest imitation to the "peg-top" trousers, whose perpetuation, in our memory, has hitherto been confined to old-time prints and publications.

Some of these coats will be a permanent part of the one costume, while others will be in the nature of a wrap, which can be worn with various gowns. Such a coat I made quite recently for stage wear with a charmeuse gown in one of those "queer" shades of blue which I love to use, and its material was black satin, with very broad borderings of snow-white fox fur.

Which reminds me to warn you, however, that if you have any idea of choosing this same black satin for one of your new wraps you must needs be absolutely sure of the skill of the maker, for it is a material which can be so easily, and fatally, dowdy, though its possibilities in the other direction of special smartness are equally great.

Only it must be cut and trimmed in just exactly the right way.

Indeed, it is just because of its difficulties —and its possibilities— that I make frequent use of it and chose it for another coat which is being worn by a very strikingly handsome and graceful actress in London's latest revue. It makes a background in this case for a daring device in ivory white lace, gold broidery, and all its fulness is deeply bordered with sable, this same fur of furs (and really it is as supremely beautiful as it is costly!) finishing the wide sleeves and forming the collar, which is laid straightly across the back. And then the lining comes as a great and glorious surprise, for its satin is of that vivid and weird shade of turquoise blue which is so closely akin to green that its inspiration must needs have been an emerald seen through the blue of a Mediterranean sea which mirrored the rival blue of the sky

This same color was repeated in the velvet brim lining of the black hat, a brim which turned sharply up at one side, while from behind its shelter there sprang upward and outward a superb white aigrette, centred with a veritable bush of black fronds. And the dress itself was of yellow satin as to the skirt, while flesh-colored chiffon and soft brown net, with a touch of fur, fashioned the long-sleeved corsage, and at the waist there were swathings of satin in emerald green, turquoise blue, black, white and orange.

Now, can you imagine something of the resulting effect and sensation?

Why Some Women of Refinement Are Acting Like Barbarians

An Interesting Psychological Analysis by G. K. Chesterton of the Murderous Mme. Caillaux and the Wanton Acts of the Suffragists.

By G. K. Chesterton, the Famous English Essayist.

IF one wrote a thousand books about the matter, one could not make a plainer picture of the difference between the English temperament and the French temperament in practical politics than by comparing the two outrages that have recently been done by prominent and educated women.

An English lady comes sincerely to the conclusion that it would be good for her body and soul to have a vote, which means the thousandth fraction of a lawyer on the make, who will always do what his party leaders tell him, and sometimes what his party opponents tell him—but never, under any earthly circumstances, what she tells [illegible]

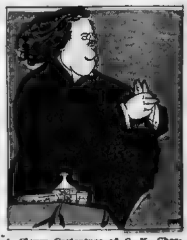
Very well. What does she do then? She thoughtfully betakes herself to a picture gallery, and walks round it until she has selected the picture which has the least possible connection with the business in hand—a very dubious Velasquez which, if it is in honor of anything, is presumably in honor of the beauty of her sex. She carefully slices it about with a chopper—without doing it irreparable injury.

To my simple masculine mind the connection of ideas is not clear.

Not long after this occasion, the wife of a French politician comes to the conclusion that her husband is being slandered by a journalist. But, strange to relate, she does not go to the Louvre and fire bullets at the Venus of Milo, which would seem the more natural course. On the contrary, she goes to the journalist's office and fires bullets at the journalist.

This is certainly a much more wicked thing to do; but I cannot conceal from myself that it is also much more intelligible. It is not very sensible, of course, because it has really sounded a trumpet for the triumph of her political enemies—just as the murder of St. Thomas of Canterbury was instantly followed by the victory of the Church and the humiliation of the King. But I can trace that connection of ideas in this case which entirely escape me in the other.

And though both these unfortunate ladies were probably hysterical and desperate, and my own instinct would be to deal leniently with them, yet in the French case one can see, through all its distortion of derangement and criminality, a curious kind of crooked shadow of the political genius of France



A Clever Caricature of G. K. Chesterton by "Matt."

But the point I wish to raise here is quite apart from the horror and distress of this particular crime. There is one peculiarity which both offenders have in common, and which seems to me to go very deep into the strange squabble of the sexes that has arisen in our time

Now the real poison and peril in that squabble is not in any mere anarchy arising out of it. It is not that people break windows, still less that they attempt to vivisect the Rokeby "Venus." I think it rather healthy for the respectable classes to have their windows broken at proper historical intervals, and as for the Rokeby "Venus," had I not attached some importance to self control, I might have put my boot through it long ago

No; the vital evil is this, that the sexes, like any other two parties to a business, may get themselves into such an attitude to each other that neither can respect the other. Everything and everybody has its weak side and its strong side; and this Suffragette business means the woman always turning her weak side to the man, and the man, in consequence, turning his weak side to the woman.

Very broadly, the weak side of the woman is unreasonableness, and the weak side of the man is brutality; and not a few signs of it are beginning to show themselves.

If I make myself clear, the one sex cannot get round to the right side of the other.

It is maddening to watch. It is like watching somebody trying to join a hook and eye, each of them hold the wrong way round. It is like watching a drunkard trying to find the keyhole with the wrong end of the key.

Now there are certain perfectly definite oddities or limitations which are more common in women, just as there are others which are more common in men. And if a man never appeared to a woman except when he was drunk, and a woman never appeared to a man except when she was in hysterics, what some call the comradeship of the sexes would scarcely be advanced. And the two political women of whom I have spoken both exhibit a trait which would probably be exhibited by the best and wisest woman in the world if she stood in this unlucky attitude toward accidental circumstances.

Frankly, the trait is this —that the things the Suffragettes do are not half so silly as the things they say And the reason for the silliness in the things they say is not in the least that they are sillier than other people, or that women are sillier than men (which they certainly are not), the reason is that they do not care what they say

They are full of the practical female glow of having done something; and the explanation they give is simply anything that comes into their heads.

The lady who gave the "Venus" a good hard knock said afterward that she had selected it as the most beautiful woman in mythology, and as a parallel to Mrs Pankhurst, who was the most beautiful character in modern history. The logical deduction of which, as it present itself to me, is that she should take a chopper and give Mrs. Pankhurst a good hard knock, since that is her symbolic way of saluting female excellence.

But I do not believe for a moment that the lady had any such theoretic reason before she performed the practical action. I think it was an afterthought. And by this I do not mean in the least that she is not serious about the justice of the vote. I mean that she is not what I should call serious about the justice of the Word—the spoken utterance, declaration or definition. So long as she is right, she doesn't think it much matters what she says. And this is not a proof of silliness; it is simply a bias of sex.

Now it is the curious fact that the unhappy woman in Paris, who went much more directly about her business in the practical sense, exhibited very much the same weird frivolity about it afterward. She appears to have said that she didn't shoot at M. Calmette to kill him, but to "give him a lesson."

She may be telling the exact truth for all I know, but it is a logical position which I cannot unravel. It seems to me strange to suppose that a gentleman who has a lot to say against you would be more inclined to let you off after you had tried to murder him and failed. It also seems to me to imply considerable confidence in your own marksmanship to suppose that you could exactly regulate the extent of the lesson conducted by emptying five barrels of a revolver into a man's back

Was it perhaps a lesson in marksmanship?

And the moral of all this is not in the least that women are incapable of common-sense, but simply that we have not enough common-sense to give them a real chance of expressing it. Women ought to be doctors; but women were doctors in the Middle ages. Women ought to sit on juries in certain cases, but in those cases they sat on juries in the Middle Ages. Women ought to be queens; but they were queens in the Middle Ages.

The reason why some hesitation has been felt about their adopting some other professions and practices will generally, I think, be found to work back to a dark sub-conscious doubt in the male mind about whether those practices are quite unimpeachably honorable. The soldier is right to kill; but killing is rather beastly. The barrister is right to cross-examine; but cross-examining is much more beastly.

What I suggest is the strange fancy that our forefathers were not all fools, and that it is worth while to consider seriously whether their traditions did not generally follow the tracks of human instinct and experience.

And the primary instinct is to avoid the occasion when people appear at their worst.

If a Frenchman and an Englishman wanted to settle something, it might be wise for the Englishman to make an appointment on Shakespeare's Cliff, overhanging the sea at Dover; or it might even be wise for the Frenchman to make an appointment in the old town of Calais, for which the burghers dared so much and which Mary Tudor had written on her heart. But I really do not advise the Frenchman and the Englishman to settle their differences on the boat between Dover and Calais on a rather stormy day. Neither could be certain of the preservation of that dignity which is a considerable part of diplomacy.

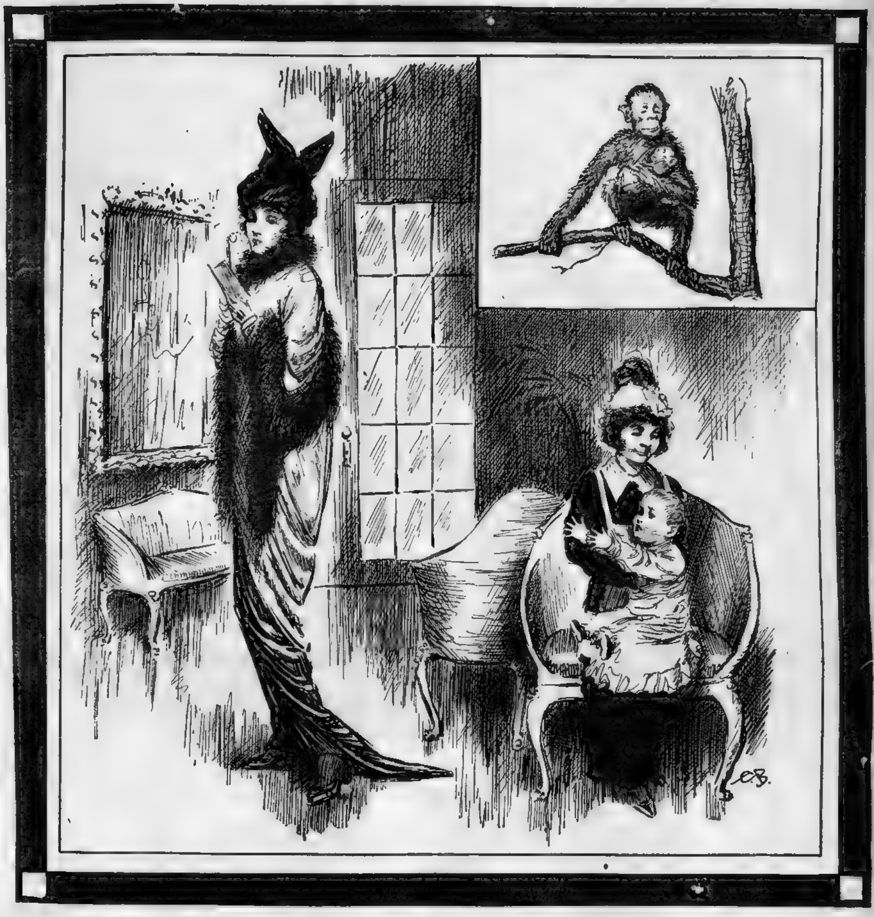
It is not really a spiritual degradation to be seasick; nor is it a spiritual degradation to be hysterical.

But there is a very real blunder in people putting themselves into these repulsive and impossible attitudes when they are trying to persuade somebody else that they are right.

And the modern quarrel between the sexes is really a misunderstanding of this sort.

The Superior Monkey Mother

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.



That Monkey Mother in the Tree, Looking After Her Own Baby, Is Better than Many Mothers Living on the Ground.

It Is Better for a Woman to Have No Children, if She Is Unwilling to Give Herself and Her Time to Those Children After They Are Born.

Every Father and Mother Should Know the Importance of PERSONAL INFLUENCE on the Growing Child.

The THING in this world is to add to the knowledge, happiness and dignity of the human race.

About 2428 years ago a baby was born in Greece. Its mother was not of the noble class, but she knew that she had done for the world great work, as is shown by these verses put into her mouth by an ancient writer:

I am not of the noble Grecian race,
I'm poor Abrotonon, and born in Thrace:
Let the Greek women scorn me if they please,
I was the mother of Themistocles.

The mother of Themistocles gave to the Greeks a man who saved them from destruction by the Persians, taught them to turn to the water, depending on their fleets and thus become independent of treacherous neighbors.

She gave to those Greek pioneers of civilization and knowledge the man who led and protected them for years, who endured ingratitude and exile patiently, was welcomed with high honors by his country's enemy—the Persian King—AND KILLED HIMSELF RATHER THAN FIGHT AGAINST HIS OWN PEOPLE. Well might the mother of such a man boast of her work and remind the aristocratic women inclined to look down upon her that she was THE MOTHER OF THEMISTOCLES.

Well may any woman, any mother, boast of her child brought into the world with fortitude, educated and protected and started in life with ALL OF THE MOTHER'S HEALTH, love and spiritual inspiration.

A child is more important to the world than any individual career, for a healthy child means THE HUMAN RACE HANDED ON TO FUTURE CENTURIES. A man, however able, can do only what may be done in the few years of HIS life.

And a woman, however good or brilliant, ends with HER days.

But in the child, the father and mother see possibilities unlimited—thousands of years of human life stretching ahead through generations.

That Greek mother was not only the mother of Themistocles, but the mother of every child and every great act that comes from him and his children and their children forever.

The woman or man who goes into the grave leaving children behind shares in the future life of the planet and its progress, in the future accomplishments of the human race.

And nothing can be more important than giving to the child, the next link in the chain to which you belong, the greatest possibility of success and usefulness.

This picture emphasizes the first duty of the mother. And it applies to the father as well as to the mother.

That duty is to give the best that is in you to a child as long as it remains under your care.

Drummond, in his "Ascent of Man," says that civilization began the first time a father gorilla sat up all night at the foot of the tree to protect his baby.

And we also say that civilization shows signs of ending when you see the mothers sitting up all night and amusing themselves, and leaving it to hired men and women exclusively to take care of their children.

It is not that a mother, any more than a father, should necessarily endure the painful drudgery and ALL the details of caring for children if others can do it properly.

The important thing is that the child shall have the mother's and the father's mental and spiritual companionship, from infancy to maturity.

Father and mother give two things to a child. First, the physical and mental INHERITANCE—the character of mind and body handed down through thousands of generations on both sides.

Second, the father and mother give personal attention, spiritual education — ENVIRONMENT almost as important to a child as the ancient inheritance itself.

The power of heredity and environment, qualities we get before we are born, and the care we get after we are born, are well illustrated in the case of Abraham Lincoln. He got his powerful body and big brain undoubtedly from his mother, Nancy Hanks. She died when he was a baby. If he had been left to grow up with the other rail splitters, ignorant, unable to read, crawling around the dirt floor of his father's cabin without care, as a baby, we should never have heard of Abraham Lincoln as we know him.

Luckily, another woman—his step-mother—came to do the work that his own mother left unfinished.

His mother, Nancy Hanks, gave him the body and the brain. His father's second wife, a devoted woman, gave him care, fired him with ambition, taught him to read. The nation owes Lincoln and his work to those two mothers—to the mother who created the child and to the second mother who directed him and helped him.

In the bringing up of your own children, it is your duty to be doubly a father or a mother.

Another proof of influence after birth, in this case that of the father, is seen in the life history of Pitt, whose diplomacy saved the British Empire from Napoleon. Pitt had an older brother, strong in health, who inherited their father's title, went to a great college, did the usual things, and was never heard of.

Pitt himself was delicate physically and it was doubtful if he would live. His father kept him with him, talked to him, discussed the problems of the day with him.

And while the strong older son, removed by his physical strength from his father's influence, amounted to nothing, the father made of the sickly boy a Prime Minister of England when he was barely out of his boyhood, one of the greatest and the most useful men that England has had, and this in spite of his feeble health.

If that sickly boy, born when his father was past fifty, had been turned over to servants and tutors, and had not had his father's spiritual care and the inspiration of his father's example, conservation and teaching, he would have been all of his life a weak, worthless drunkard.

Now he and his father lie in the same tomb in Westminster Abbey. The only tomb that we know of containing such a father and such a son.

Under the plan of this world the animals, it seems, are MADE to do automatically what they ought to do. And human beings are left to decide for themselves.

The monkey in this picture teaches the baby monkey everything that she knows—how to run along a limb without falling, how to jump from one tree to another, how to hang by the tail, keep away from snakes, etc.

The hen teaches the little chickens to scratch for worms.

All the better class of animal mothers teach the child all that they know.

The pity is that there are not more human beings ABLE to teach their children, set them a good example, and inspire them with ambition.

The curse of nine-tenths of the children is second-class parentage.

But kindness and devotion are of themselves teaching forces, and these at least every father and mother can give to the children.

Make your children lead regular lives, the same hours for eating, sleeping, exercising and studying. And within those regular hours KEEP YOUR CHILDREN WITH YOU AS MUCH AS POSSIBLE. Thus you will double their chance in life.

Children learn nothing from each other, except as the animals learn from each other—how to play, run and fear the stronger. Teach your children to THINK. Thinking with human beings is as important as scratching worms with chickens or climbing trees with monkeys.

When the child wants to KNOW, answer in such a way as to make the young mind do part of the work. Ask first of all "What do YOU think?" Encourage the first feeble MENTAL steps of your child as you encourage the first tottering footsteps.

Every father watches with delight the baby's first attempt to walk, picking up the little body over and over again as it falls.

Be as patient with the first MENTAL steps, watch them as affectionately and with as real interest.

We have not all education to give our children, but we all have INFORMATION, and that is what the little minds crave.

Tell them about the animals, the birds, trees and flowers. Read to them, slowly and patiently, and EXPLAIN as you read. Be patient with their shortcomings, above all. Every man knows enough not to kill the spirit of a young horse or dog with brutal punishment. He should know as much about his children.

For children well born whipping is never necessary. Even the born idiot can be most successfully managed by kindness. Brutality is forbidden in scientifically managed lunatic asylums.

He who whips his child admits that he has created a being lower than the idiot or the maniac—or what is really the fact, he admits that he himself belongs to a low class and that his child is to be pitied. No child was ever struck EXCEPT IN ANGER. Remember that and do not deceive yourself.

The man who would be AFRAID to strike a man four times his size should be ASHAMED to strike a child one quarter his size. Tell that to those that beat their children. And if any man strikes your child, be it a teacher or any other, have him arrested for assault.

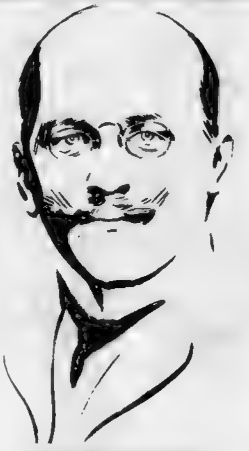
It should be remembered that to influence children a good example is infinitely more important than a complete education in the father. A devoted father or mother, not well educated, but patient, honest, teaching truth, answering questions patiently and affectionately, will do more than the greatest teachers could do WITHOUT affection.

It was affection and patient interest, not education, that made Lincoln what he was. Live with your children, think with them, listen to them, be patient, PRACTISE WHAT YOU PREACH to them, and they will do you honor.

Our Social Sanity Threatened, Says America's Foremost Psychologist

Prof. Hugo Muensterberg, of Harvard, Points Out, in His Latest Book, the Modern Tendencies Away from Social Equilibrium, Declares Old American Qualities Have Been Lost and "That Imperial Rome Should Be a Warning to Imperial Manhattan."

By Prof. Henry L. Weston, Ph. D.



Professor Hugo Muensterberg.

PROFESSOR HUGO MUENSTERBERG, of Harvard University, who is commonly regarded as the leading psychologist of America, has just published a new book of essays—"Psychology and Social Sanity" (Doubleday Page & Co.

The distinguished psychologist appears to be of the opinion that America is rapidly wandering away from social sanity. He sees grave dangers in the universal craze for sensuous dances. He fears that all the best elements of New England Puritanism have been perverted or submerged. He finds that the whole country is being flooded with sex literature and sex plays and that the proposal to give sex instruction to young people is a grave menace to modesty and morality. He even looks forward to a time when disreputable women will sway the public life of America, as they formerly did that of France.

He fears that the ideals that made America great will be lost in the rising tide of socialism. He is alarmed to find that a large part of the population is victimized by what he calls "the intellectual underworld," composed of seers, mind readers and quacks, who prey on the superstitions of the weak minded. In fact, the American nation must appear to the Harvard psychologist at times like a vast lunatic asylum.

The new dances are the social phenomena that the professor evidently regards as most disconcerting, not to say exciting. Here it must be remarked that the tango and the maxixe acquire a new interest when described by so eminent a scholar.

"Can we deny," asks Professor Muensterberg, "that this recent craze which, like a dancing mania, has whirled over the country, is a significant expression of deep cultural changes which have come to America? Only ten years ago such a dancing fever would have been impossible. People danced, but they did not take it seriously. It was set off from life and not allowed to penetrate it. It had still essentially the role which belonged to it in a puritanic hard-working society. But the last decade has rapidly swept away that New England temper which was so averse to the sensuous enjoyment of life, and which long kept an invisible control over the spirit of the whole nation. Symptoms of the change abound, how it came about is another question.

"Certainly the increase and the wide distribution of wealth with its comforts and luxuries were responsible, as well as the practical completion of the pioneer days of the people, the rich blossoming of science and art, and, above all, the tremendous influx of warm-blooded, sensual peoples who came in millions from Southern and Eastern Europe, and who altered the tendencies of the cool-blooded Teutonic races in the land.

They have changed the old American Sunday, and they have revolutionized the inner life they have brought the operas to every large city, and the kinematograph to every village and have at last played the music to a nation-wide dance. Yet the problem which faces every one is not how this dancing craze arose, but rather where it may lead; how far it is healthy and how far unsound; how far it is healthy to yield to it or further it, and how far we ought to resist. To answer this question it is not enough to watch the outside spectacle, but we must inquire into the mental motives and mental consequences. Exactly this is our true problem.

"Let us first examine the psychological account. No one can doubt that true dangers are near wherever the dancing habit is prominent. The dance is a bodily movement which aims at no practical purpose and is thus not bound by outer necessities. It is simply self expression, and this gives to the dancing impulse the liberty which easily becomes licentiousness. Two mental conditions help in that direction; the mere movement as such produces increased excitement, and the excitement reinforces the movement, and so the dance has in itself the tendency to become quicker and wilder and more and more unrestrained. When gay Vienna began its waltzing craze in the last century, it waltzed to the charming melodies of Lanner in a rhythm which did not demand more than about one hundred and sixty movements in a minute; but soon came Johann Strauss, the father, and the average waltzing rhythm was two hundred and thirty a minute, and finally the king of waltz, Johann Strauss, the younger, and Vienna danced at the rhythm of three hundred movements.

"But another mental effect is still more significant than the impulse to increase rapidity. The uniformity of the movements, and especially the revolving movement, produces a state of half dizziness and half numbness with ecstatic elements. We know the almost hypnotic state of the whirling Dervishes and the raptures in the savage war dances; all this in milder form is involved in every passionate dance. But nothing is more characteristic of such half hypnotic states than that the individual loses control of his will. He behaves like a drunken man who becomes the slave of his excitement and of every suggestion from without. No doubt many seek the dancing excitement as a kind of substitute for the alcoholic exaltation.

"That social injury must be feared if the social community indulges in such habits of undisciplined, passionate expression needs no explaining. The mind is a unit; it cannot be without self-control in one department and under the desirable self-discipline of the will in another. A period in which the mad rush of dancing stirs social life must be unfavorable to the development of thorough training and earnest endeavor. The fate of imperial Rome ought to be the eternal warning to imperial Manhattan. Italy, like America, took its art and science from over the sea, but gave to them abundant wealth. Instead of true art, it cultivated the virtuosi, and in Rome, which paid three thousand dancers, the dance was in glory until it began ingloriously to sink.

"Not without inner relation to the inebriety, and yet distinctly different, is the erotic character of the dance. Lovemaking is the most central, underlying motive of all the mimic dances all over the globe. Among many primitive peoples the dance is a real pantomimic presentation of the whole story from the first tender awaking of a sweet desire through the warmer and warmer courtship to the raptures of sensual delight. Civilized society has more or less covered the naked passion, but from the graceful play of the minuet to the graceless movements of the turkey trot the sensual, not to say the sexual, element can easily be recognized by the sociologist.

"Here again cause and effect move in a circle. Love excitement expresses itself in the dance, and the dance heightens the love excitement. This erotic appeal to the senses is the chief reason why the church has generally taken a hostile attitude. For a long while the dance was denounced as irreligious and sinful on account of Salome's blasphemous dancing. Certainly the rigid guardians of morality always look askance on the contact of the sexes in the ballroom."

The professor shows a profound knowledge of the dance and throws much new light upon the causes of the sensual dangers that are associated with it.

"The dance has still another psychological effect," he continues, "which must not be disregarded from a social point of view. It awakes to an unusual degree the impulse to imitation. The seeing of rhythmic movements starts similar motor impulses in the mind of the onlooker. It is well known that from the eleventh to the sixteenth century Europe suffered from dancing epidemics. They started from pathological cases of St. Vitus' dance and released in the excitable crowds cramplike impulses to imitative movements. But we hear the same story of instinctive imitations on occasions of less tragic character. It is reported that in the eighteenth century papal Rome was indignant over the passionate Spanish fandango.

It was decided solemnly to put this wild dance under the ban. The lights of the church were assembled for the formal judgment when it was proposed to call a pair of Spanish dancers in order that every one of the priests might form his own idea of the unholy dance. But history tells that the effect was an unexpected one. After a short time of fandango demonstration the high clerics began involuntarily to imitate the movements, and the more passionately the Spaniards indulged in their native whirl, the more the whole court was transformed into one great dancing party. Even the Italian tarantella probably began as a disease with nervous dancing movements, and then spread over the land through mere imitation which led to an ecstatic turning around and around. Whoever studies the adventures of American dancing during the last season from New York to San Francisco must be impressed by this contagious character of our dancing habits. But this means that the movement carries in itself the energy to spread further and further, and to fill the daily life with increased longing for the ragtime. We are already accustomed to the dance at the afternoon tea; how long will it take before we are threatened by the dance at the breakfast coffee?"

The professor points out the interesting fact that the overemphasis on dancing has usually characterized a period of political reaction, of indifference to public life, of social stagnation and carelessness. When the volcanoes were rumbling the masses were always dancing. At all times when tyrants wanted to divert the attention of the crowd they gave the dances to their people. A nation which dances cannot think, but lives from hour to hour. The less political maturity the more happiness does a national community show in its dancing pleasures. The Spaniards and the Polish, the Hungarians and the Bohemians have always been great dancers—the gypsies dance."

The professor declares himself by no means averse to all dancing, but his essay is plainly more devoted to the dangers of the present popular form of it than to the benefits to be derived from rational and modest indulgence.

In his interesting essay on "Sex Education" Professor Muensterberg makes a bitter attack on the policy of giving instruction in certain physiological facts to adolescent boys and girls. He asserts that the mystery with which such subjects were formerly clothed was the best protection of the modesty and innocence of the young, and that such instruction as is given must arouse a desire to sin without suffering the penalty. The professor admits that the policy of instruction has proceeded far and calls on society to reverse it. He calls attention to some remarkable evidences of social demoralization he has witnessed.

Again and again he declares that sex matters are being overemphasized in this country. Perhaps the most novel passage in this essay is that in which he suggests that as a result of the erotic state of the public mind women of evil repute may exercise dominating influence in American affairs, as they did at the old French court and at other historic periods. He makes this startling suggestion in the following words:

"In this vicious circle of craving for sensual stimuli and talking about sexual problems the process of transformation of the whole social body is usually a rapid one. The Rococo age reached many subtleties, which we do not dream of as yet, but to which the conspiracy against silence may boldly push us. Read the memoirs of Casanova, the Italian of the eighteenth century, whose biography gives a vivid picture of a time in which certainly no one was silent on sexual affairs, and in which life was essentially a chain of gallant adventures.

"In the select American circles it is already noticeable that the favorites of rich men get a certain social acknowledgment. The great masses have not reached this stage at present, which is, of course, very familiar in France. But if we proceed in that rapid rhythm with which we have changed in the last ten years, ten years hence we may have substituted the influence of mistresses for the influence of Tammany grafters, and twenty years hence a Madame Pompadour may be dwelling not far from the White House and controlling the fate of the nation with her small hands, as she did for two decades when Louis XV. was King. History has sufficiently shown that these are the logical consequences of the sensualization of a rich people, whose mind is filled with sexual problems. Are we to wait, too, until a great revolution or a great war shakes the nation to its depths and hammers new ideas of morality into its conscience?"

This is the effect the policy of discussing matters that were formerly hidden from the young is now producing, in the opinion of Professor Muensterberg:

"It means to fill the atmosphere in which the growing adolescent moves with sultry ideas. It means to stir up the sexual desires and to teach children how to indulge in them without immediate punishment. Just as in a community of graft and corruption the individual soon loses the finer feeling for honesty and crime flourishes simply because every one knows that nobody expects anything better, so in a community in which sexual problems are the lessons of the youth and the dinner talk of the adult the feeling of respect for man's deepest emotions fades away. Man and woman lose the instinctive shyness in touching on this sacred ground, and as the organic desires push and push toward it the youth soon discovers that the barriers to the forbidden ground are removed and that in their place stands a simple signal with a suggestive word of warning against some easily avoided traps."

The wisest policy, in Professor Muensterberg's opinion, will be to strengthen the instinctive emotion of mysterious respect, which makes the young mind shrink from brutal intrusion into the most sacred relationships of life.

Among many other interesting observations on socialism, Professor Muensterberg makes this forecast:

"The country has entered into a career of progressive experiments; the traditional respect for the old constitutional system of checks and balances to the mere will of the crowd has been undermined. The real legislative reign of the masses has just begun, and it would seem only natural that such an entirely new movement should be pushed forward by its own momentum. If the genius of America, which was conservative, turns radical, the political machinery here would be more fit than that of any other land to allow the enforcement of socialism. This will not come to-day or to-morrow, but that socialism may suddenly be with us the day after to-morrow is the possibility with which the neutral observer must count."

To Shorten Trans-Atlantic Trips by Tunnelling Ireland with England

By Henry Grattan Tyrell, C. E.

The Well-Known American Engineering Expert)

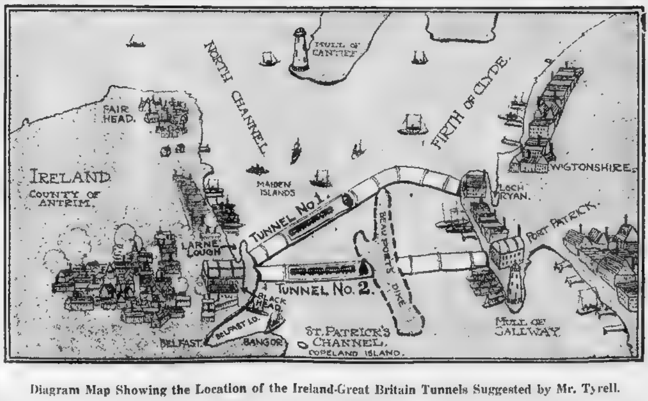


Diagram Map Showing the Location of the Ireland-Great Britain Tunnels Suggested by Mr. Tyrell.

THE struggle of more than one hundred years from the days of Henry Grattan to the present seems to have resulted in but little benefit, and instead of increasing, the population of Ireland has decreased till it is now less than five millions. It is fitting, therefore, to inquire as to whether or not all of the most effective remedies have been tried to relieve conditions there.

As a general rule, people are contented when prosperous and discontented in want or adversity. In Ireland the discontent has appeared chiefly in the south, where poverty is in greatest evidence. It would seem, therefore, that beneath all other causes, poverty may be the real underlying source of discontent. The trouble is no doubt partly due to Ireland's isolated position and its separation from the islands to the east, causing it to receive less than its rightful share of business and trade.

Assuming then that poverty is at least a partial cause of the unrest in Ireland, it is easy to prescribe the remedy, since disseminated wealth is the natural cure. The experience of Canada and other countries is that one of the most effective ways of improving commercial conditions is by the introduction and construction of modern transportation systems, which permit the people to compete for trade with other countries, and to receive, in return, the products and commodities of other regions. In this respect Ireland has and always has been lacking, for it is cut off from England by the Irish sea and never has received its proper share of the world's business. Shipping from Europe and America, as a general rule, goes to Liverpool, London or Glasgow, and Irish ports receive only a local trade. Indeed, goods from America going to Dublin often go first to Liverpool to be shipped back again from there to Ireland.

As a means of inducing and disseminating wealth in Ireland I therefore propose the construction of a railway across the Irish Channel, thus making a positive railway connection with England and Scotland. Busy ocean ports would then be established and developed on the west Atlantic coast, and Ireland would be a part and an active factor in the commerce of the world. It would also become an integral part of Great Britain and would have advantages equal to those which England enjoys.

As an additional measure for giving Ireland its full share of ocean trade I propose the building of a ship canal from Dublin to Galway Bay, the cost of which would not be less than forty to fifty million dollars.

These two constructive enterprises should so stimulate commercial activity in the island as to cause the people to forget their grievances and to turn their thought to enjoying their greater incomes. With the pressure of poverty removed, fewer laws would be needed for restraining a once discontented people.

It is well known that a channel railway from England to France has always been opposed by the English people, who feared that it might form an easy entrance for hostile armies in case of war. Whether or not there is any ground for continuance of this objection since the introduction of airships for military purposes need not be discussed here, but it is certain that the objection cannot exist with the Irish Channel.

Whether or not it would be commercially profitable, in earning dividends for investors, is doubtful, but it would accomplish a far greater object than that, for it would bring contentment to a rebellious people, and with government security for interest on the bonds, the capital should easily be obtained.

The Irish Channel Railway is of international interest and importance because it would form one link in the proposed Imperial Route connecting all parts of the British Empire.

Over this route it is intended that travel shall be conducted with the greatest possible speed, and in the event of war Great Britain would have independent communication with all parts of the Empire and could receive supplies from Australia and New Zealand in about twenty-four days.

Its course would be across the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by way of Canada, instead of through the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean Sea, and past the forts of foreign countries. Food supplies from Canada and the West would would then arrive in Great Britain at ports on the west coast of Ireland, which in times of war would be much safer than others further to the south or on the English Channel adjoining France.

This consideration in itself is of great importance when it is remembered that the British Isles are dependent upon other countries for provisions, and a month's blockade might result in starvation of the inhabitants.

A Channel railway would not only develop Irish ports, but it would also reduce the time by several hours for crossing the Atlantic. On the completion of the Imperial Route, Canada will become the central part of the Empire, and traffic to England that would otherwise come from the east by way of Europe and the Mediterranean will then be carried over the new Canadian railroads. The completion of the Imperial Route is now assured by the co-operation of Great Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

Canadian sections of the Imperial Route include not only the three great transcontinental railways, but the proposed Hudson Bay and Pacific Railway, 1,600 miles long, from Churchill to Port Simpson, and another direct line, 1,700 miles long, from Cape Charles on the Labrador coast running south of Hudson Bay to Winnipeg, a charter for which has been asked from the Dominion Government. It includes also the Georgian Bay canal, the cost of which will approximate $100,000,000.

Across the Atlantic from Labrador to Ireland is 1,600 knots, and steamers travelling 26 knots per hour will make the trip in three days. The steamship line chatered by the Canadian Parliament in 1907, to sail from Blacksod to Halifax, can make its western terminus at Labrador when the railroad is built.

Blacksod, in Mayo County, at the northwestern part of Connaught, is the chosen port in Ireland, since it has a deep channel and a magnificent harbor protected at the entrance by Achill Island. In case of war this port, situated well to the north, might be safer than others at Sligo, Galway Bay or further south. The Irish ports would in any case be busy commercial centres, and rivals of Liverpool or Glasgow, with great elevators, warehouses and facilities for loading and storing coal and other products. Furthermore, the region is picturesque and rich in historic interest for travellers and tourists.

Blacksod is now being connected with Larne on the Irish Channel by a line of railroad across the island, which is under construction, assisted by grants from the Imperial Parliament.

At least four methods are possible for crossing the Irish Channel, though only two appear at present to be practicable. They are (1) a causeway, (2) a bridge, (3) a tunnel, and (4) a floating tube. Any of these methods would involve large expenditure, and yet, to save a little time from London to the north, the great Forth bridge was built at a cost of $13,000,000.

An unfortunate feature of the channel is the presence in the middle of a deep depression known as Beaufort's Dyke, 400 to 500 feet deep below the normal sea bottom. The depth in the central valley is therefore 600 to 900 feet, and in selecting a location this depression must be considered. Data relating to several possible locations are given in the following table

LOCATION	Length, Miles	Depth of Water
Fair Head to Mull of Cantyre	14	160 ft.
Maiden Islands to Laggan Head	25	500 ft.
Great Copeland Island Route	29	650 ft.
Whitehead to Port Patrick	23	650 ft.
Whitehead to Port Patrick (curved route)	27	500 ft.
Donaghadee to Port Patrick	22	900 ft.

The first of these from Fair Head, being so much the shortest, would be the best, excepting that it leads over to the Mull of Cantyre in a northeasterly direction into Scotland, and would involve several other expensive water crossings which make it impracticable. St. Patrick's Channel, opposite Belfast, with a width of over twenty miles, must therefore be selected instead of the narrower one further north.

Of the four possible methods of crossing, a continuous embankment for a double track line would cost at least $100,000,000 and perhaps more, and it would be a serious obstruction to shipping. It might serve, however, for developing electric power from the strong northern current by damming the channel and creating a head, but this would doubtless lower the water level in the harbors at Liverpool, Dublin and Belfast, which would hardly be permitted.

A bridge over water of such great depth would necessarily be on floating piers, and such a structure would cost from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 which would be impracticable.

Sub-aqueous tunnels more than 150 feet below water are possible only when they are driven through impervious rock where it is unnecessary to exclude water by means of compressed air. The greatest air pressure ever tried for this purpose is 47 pounds per square inch, corresponding with a depth of 175 feet below the surface, and this was only for experiments. Usually 35 to 40 pounds pressure per square inch is enough. The tunnel might be dry if cut to a low enough level through solid rock, but the rock condition could not be positively determined until the drift was made. Under the Mersey and Severn, in England, tunnels have 30 to 40 feet of rock overhead.

The most promising of all methods for crossing this deep and navigable channel is by means of a floating tube, either on the surface or submerged. It would consist of a metal shell lined with concrete to give it strength and weight. As the metal would become corroded with rust and finally eaten through, the concrete would still remain, greatly hardened with age.

For a tube floating on the surface I would leave openings of 1,000 feet, four to five miles apart, for the passage of ships, the position of the openings being indicated by signals. Beneath these openings the tube would be depressed, leaving 40 to 45 feet of water above it for the passage of the largest ships afloat, which at present does not exceed 36 feet. This would provide for increased draught, as has been done on the Panama Canal. The depressed portions would be connected by easy grades with the surface sections, which must be strong enough to resist all surface disturbances, and to bridge the waves from one crest to another.

A tube submerged throughout its entire length, is, however, preferable to one on the surface, for the channel is then all clear for navigation. It would lie in quiet water free from the effect of wind and wave, and be supported continuously, which would require a minimum bridging strength. The weight of the tube would be made to nearly equal the weight of the water displaced, having a slight buoyancy when empty, resisted by the anchor chains, and a downward pressure when loaded with a train, to be resisted by surface floats. These upward and downward pulls being nearly equal, would permit the cross section of the tube to be nearly or quite uniform.

The roadway in the submerged tube would lie about 60 feet below the surface instead of down below Beaufort's Dyke, and the approaches would be proportionately shorter. The tube sections would be built on shore in convenient lengths of 200 to 400 feet, with closed ends, and then towed out into position and sunk. The temporary end dams would be 4 to 5 feet back from the ends, leaving space for the divers when bolting the sections together. The cost of such a double track tube would be $25,000,000 to $30,000,000.

No great structure of this kind has ever been built and precedent on a large scale is lacking. But experience with some smaller ones indicate definite advantage. Two swing bridges built some years ago at Dublin were supported on floating centre piers and one was afterward installed at Northwich, England. More recent designs for replacing the famous Hooghly pontoon bridge at Calcutta, India, brought forth plans in detail for supporting a bridge platform on floating piers either lying on the surface or anchored well beneath it. The studies in this case show the method to be entirely practicable.

Opposition to the railway would, of course, be expected from the dozen or more steamship lines sailing to Cork, Waterford, Rosslare, Dublin, Drogheda, Greenore, Belfast, Larne and Londonderry, whose trade might be injured by railway competition. A direct course from England to Belfast by the tunnel route might also affect trade in Dublin and other cities to the south, and arouse their opposition. But no special interest should be allowed to interfere with a project, the completion of which would be a benefit to all the people, both rich and poor.

Passengers would welcome such a railway in order to avoid the rough boat passage over the Irish Sea, and shippers of freight would appreciate the rapid transportation, since goods consigned at English ports are not delivered now by boat until the following day.

It is greatly to be hoped that instead of endeavoring to pacify Ireland with further legislation which in the past has proved to be ineffective Great Britain may adopt a new policy, and bring contentment to a deserving people by constructive enterprises which will build up commerce, increase wealth and give all the comforts which are generally enjoyed in England.

In this connection it may be noted that an English syndicate is now negotiating for the building of a subway system for Chicago, to cost $150,000,000; a Chicago engineer is planning the new national capital for Australia; Canadian capitalists are building extensive public works in Mexico and South America; and a French syndicate spent millions of European money on beginning the American Canal at Panama. A proposal from America for a railroad across the Irish Channel is, therefore merely indicative of the increasing interchange of services between countries and nations.

The Importance of Play and Relaxation in Producing Health and Geniuses

The Need of Recreation and Amusement in Our Busy American Life Demonstrated by Science from the Frolics of Animals, The Garden of Eden Ideal, the Games of Ancient Greece, the Beer Gardens of Germany and the Lives of Huxley and Darwin.

AMONG the primitive instincts of all animal life are those of self-preservation of the desire for food and the perpetuation of species.

Claiming a very close relationship to these essential and insistent vital motives is the desire to play. We find this instinct manifested in practically every grade of animal life from the insect up to mankind. The playfulness of the kitten, the games of birds and even those of reptiles are matters of the most common place and certain scientific observation. The frolics of puppies, of colts, of young calves and all manner of our wild friends, but most beautiful of all the pranks of our own babies, are so commonplace and so much a part and parcel of life in its happier aspects that I need but to recall them to you to induce you to accept with me that play is indeed an essential and primitive part of all animal life.

It is also readily shown that in most instances the plays of youth under natural conditions and in all grades of the scale of evolution are largely preparatory for the sterner obligations of adult life. The higher we ascend in the ladder of mental and nervous developments the more marked and evident does this instinct of play become and the greater its necessity. You are then, I hope, prepared to accept with me the axiom that play and relaxation are a part of life itself, and since we find no such general instinct in nature, without a deep and important purpose, we must assume that in some way play is a necessary part of life and that as life becomes more complicated the necessity for it becomes the greater.

Man's recognition of this fact goes back as far as history, and the very earliest of history tells us that Adam and Eve were given one everlasting holiday, and had it not been for that very unfortunate vegetarian fad of our first militant ancestor, it is quite probable that we all should be this very day joyfully gamboling about some beautiful park, instead of considering the wherewithal shall we be clothed and the office for to-morrow and the rent day of next month.

All the great nations of history have recognized the need for relaxation and recreation. We see this demonstrated even by the stern Spartans in their games and by their feast days. It is also evidenced by the art of ancient Greece and it is manifested to-day by our public parks, concerts, art collections, athletic games and zoological gardens. Practically every Government, be it more or be it less paternal in type, has arranged for the play and relaxation of its people. The fiestas of the Latin people, the beer gardens and glorious music of those serious-minded scientists, the Germans, are but evidences of this impelling instinct and the necessity of its normal gratification for the public welfare. Even our own Government has taken cognizance of this instructive demand, and we see it recognized in the establishment of national playgrounds, such as the Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. Hardly now a State or a city of any pretense but what has its Yosemite, its Prospect Park, or its Bronx Zoo.

Napoleon's greatness was no more manifested by his great military operations than in his constructive establishment of art collections and his encouragement of architecture and of the numerous similar institutions of France. Perhaps we should have even forgotten Great Caesar's conquests had he not amused himself by the writing of them down. This is a form of amusement, however, which I am afraid some of you in common with myself may have looked upon as anything but an innocent occupation when we were first attempting to describe that crucial bridge. So great a statesman as Patrick Henry even gave the object of life as "the pursuit of happiness."

National, State and Municipal Governments, despotic or popular, have thus since the time of history made the subject of play and relaxation a serious study and a public care. We hear of city opera, of State theatres, and public playgrounds. Many, if not most of these, are designed not so much to educate as to amuse and to relax, and their establishment is a recognition of that instinctive craving within us for play and diversion, an instinct which then demands thoughtful attention.

In our convalescent wards at the hospitals we have found the necessity of the visiting quartette, of the phonograph, the books, games and of the pictures designed to entertain and divert. All these subjects have under such circumstances become matters of grave study and careful supervision. We have our professional play instructors, just as certain of the birds, the partridge family for example, have also theirs. The story-tellers of the Romans, of the Norsemen or those of our own Americans, the Apaches or the Comanches, are replaced by the trained story-tellers of our city libraries and public schools.

But although every one must recognize these general facts as I have stated them, how infrequently it is that we hear of any person carefully and studiously arranging for his play and relaxation. This is the point to which I wish to especially call your attention this evening. For I am convinced that there is great need for the individual to carefully instruct himself in these matters. A great medical scientist and teacher (Dr. V. C. Vaughn) was accustomed to tell his students that perhaps quite as much of success in life depended on the selection of a hobby or form of relaxation, as in the choice of a profession.

At least a certain part of life shoud be spent in preparation for old age. We store up money, fine books, art treasures and even friends and fame for our period of senility. It is equally, or more, important to store up diversion and relaxation for that period when the fires of ambition burn low and when the new and unaccustomed fail to attract. Do any of you know a more miserable existence than that of a once busy man in his old age, when work is no longer possible, and when no diverting pastimes or pursuits have been cultivated to make old age the reward and sweetness that it should be? A happy old age, as a happy adult life, must be a busy one, and when youth and the summer of life have been so spent, so tutored, so educated as to make old age still a busy and occupied period, it becomes as joyful as youth itself.

Perhaps we can most vividly bring out the necessity to the individual of serious consideration of this subject by first mentioning some of the disadvantages of those who are not so equipped. Professor Bryant, in a recent number of Popular Science, has advanced the very probable theory that the world-wide inclination to the use of alcohol is primarily founded on a mental condition created artificially by this drug which stimulates and perhaps replaces to a certain degree the normal instinct of relaxation and play. Psychologists tell us that crime itself is in large part founded on a perverted play instinct, and is frequently but an evidence of abnormal desire for relaxation, for change.

Habitual criminals are those who have in most instances few possibilities in the way of natural and innocent play, and criminals are now largely treated, as Oliver Wendel Holmes predicted, by education along these lines. The fact is well recognized, I believe, by all students of sociology. The sinister and stern, mental type of those who view everything except work as a vanity and delusion is obvious to us all. Play we will and play we must, even though our play and relaxation may take on such abnormal bents as those of drunkenness or as the designing of punishment for others, or even impel one singularly deficient in humanity and in sense of proportion to the joining of anti-vivisection movements.

All of us are familiar with persons who have made financial or perhaps professional successes and yet whose life is most unhappy, because no diversions or outside interests have been cultivated. Not infrequently such persons, though actually successful, derive very little true joy and satisfaction from life. A philosopher has truly said that peace, play and real joy cannot be purchased. The truest of joys lie within the individual himself, and unless the traits have been developed and nurtured a life, no matter how materially successful, becomes an unhappy one.

Pray do not understand me to be an advocate of the life of pure pleasure. I entirely agree with that old philosopher who said that "work is the greatest play of all," but variety is indeed the spice of existence, the bass but serves to bring out the beauty of the upper register of the violin or oboe. Contrast and change are as essential in congenial occupation as the mystery of the night after the beauty of the sunny day. The one must be the foil, the guard of the other. Gifford Pinchot has said that "the one best receipt for carrying responsibility easily is not to carry it all the time. The spring whose tension is never released must weaken, and the man who thinks about nothing but work is eventually consumed by it. In a sense, our best work is done in our play time."

A well known New York physician, in speaking of vacations and of their necessity in modern life, has expressed the same idea, but in different words. He has said that many men can do twelve months' work in ten months, but no man can long continue to do twelve months' work in twelve months. Like most habits, those of play and relaxation become fixed and grooved as we age, even as to our likes and dislikes of persons, food or drink. Hence, the great importance of early training in these directions in order that the greatest benefits and the greatest aids for the future may be provided.

I therefore particularly wish to call your attention to-night to the necessity for selecting in early life those pleasures or relaxations which are most apt to be beneficial in old age, or when one is most busy with the grim necessities of life. Cognizance in this respect must be taken of the future and of the lines of work most likely to be pursued by the individual. One would not train a boy destined for a marine career in horsemanship, or a ranchman of our great West in the sport of yachting or the art of salt-water fishing.

Perhaps the first essential to be considered in the selection of a hobby or method of relaxation is the accessibility of that method, not only now but in the probable future. A second important factor dependent upon the first is the possibility of such a method of relaxation remaining open and accessible throughout life without seriously compromising business or social necessities. This does not, of course, mean that one who takes up as his hobby, let us say baseball, must therefore expect to play the game all his life, for the most essential part of relaxation is often obtained not from the play itself, but from the mental diversion and interest in it, and at times quite as much benefit may be obtained from an active interest in any sport as from active participation.

A third requirement for ideal play for any person is that it should give pleasure. Without this important attribute the full measure of benefit cannot be derived from any form of relaxation. The simple and solitary exercises in a gymnasium in no way approach in benefit those derived from games or competitions into which the spirit of pleasure and keen interest enter very largely. I question very much, for example, the utility of horseback riding for those to whom it is no joy, but a torture and agony.

In general, also, those diversions which present greatest benefit to the individual are such as combine with pleasure the greatest possible change of action and thought from those avenues most accustomed in the work-a-day life.

It may, therefore, be observed that usually those forms of play are personally best which are most pleasant to the individual, unless his appetite in these directions has been abnormally cultivated or perverted. The natural instinct of a brain-worker is toward those forms of pleasure or relaxation which involve physical exercise. The professor loves his walks, his fishing trips or his hunting excursions. On the other hand, those who earn their daily bread and who carry on the ordinary functions of their life chiefly in a physical way should seek their relaxation more in mental directions. The physical worker, for example, commonly receives his greatest satisfaction and benefit as to play and relaxation in reading or in some other mental avocation. It is indeed true that the best of play is oftentimes but a variety of work or study, a change rather than a rest.

The benefits of play and relaxation are not expressed only in mental terms. It is by no means only to make us happy that we need play and relaxation. It is quite as much necessary to make and keep us physically well. Diverting pleasure rests and relieves the tired and overworked mind as does sleep. It is nearly as essential and quite as direct in its effect on the physical conditions of the body.

Relaxation and play even affect the most elemental of the body functions. A high blood pressure may at times be quickly lowered by the peaceful strains of agreeable music, and the flagging and tired heart or muscles are stimulated by the martial strains of the military band. The thrill of the fife and the roll of the drum quicken the pulse and send up blood pressure more certainly and more promptly than do strychnine or digitalis. All of us recognize the delightful effects of music, properly designed to induce sleep.

The purr of the cat and night notes of the thrush are but nature's lullabies. How frequently it is that a few pages of an interesting or amusing book will quiet the tired, jaded or depressed mind and induce good nature or sleep much more satisfactorily than any of the drugs which your doctor has in his saddle-bags. Relaxation and diverting pleasure are better aids to digestion than the most potent ferments on the pharmacist's shelves. There is no more powerful stimulant to the appetite than congenial friends and agreeable conversation. These are indeed the best and safest of cocktails.

It is, therefore, well worth the time of any person, who is either busy or who expects so to be, to seriously study and consider this important problem of play, that its more satisfactory results may assist him throughout life, which will at the same time become thereby more happy, perhaps longer and doubtless more useful.

Probably the most generally desirable single method of play or relaxation is reading. This is particularly true because the character of the reading may be readily adapted to the particular likes or needs of the individual. I know a great mathematician, one of the greatest that this country has produced, whose chief relaxation, now that physical infirmities have cut off his customary physical pleasures, is the reading of detective stories. Another man, whose excursions have barely led him beyond the borders of New York, has made himself, by reading during his few hours of relaxation, an authority on polar exploration. His name has become a frequent one in the geography of both the Far North and of the Far South, and he has been one of the greatest sources of encouragement to many intrepid men who have actually carried out the field work of these arm-chair excursions. No matter what line of work a man may do, reading, once the habit has been formed, adds to his efficiency and work, and at the same time in itself affords for him at least a certain measure of relaxation and an increased interest in both his vocation and in his avocation.

Nature studies are possible for nearly every man who has even a few hours weekly to spend out-of-doors. An acquaintance of mine, a business man, who commuted for domestic reasons, adopted the study of the bird life of the bay on his trips to and from Staten Island. He has derived much pleasure and benefit from his study, and it has proven so interesting that his Sundays and holidays are spent in a similar manner, all without the loss of an hour from his business. Another friend, whose business connections prevented his taking a vacation far from the city, similarly occupied himself with the bird life about his suburban home. When, during the Winter season, he moved to the city, he found the birds of Central Park quite sufficient to pleasantly occupy his spare time. Shortly his descriptions and his photographs of this apparently narrow and circumscribed subject became so important that the lesser matter of business has come to be replaced by his play, which has contributed much to the pleasure of all of us and to real science.

So we might go on indefinitely. Nearly all the great geographical discoveries have been made by men who first in their regular life took up geography as a relaxation or side line of study. An indifferent theological student has become Vladmir Steffansen. Robert Peary deserted engineering problems for the discovery of the North Pole and for his invaluable contributions to the geography of the Far North.

To be a play of staying powers, one which lasts, the game must possess something more than mere entertaining qualities. One soon tires of such a sport and the relaxation which really lasts and endures uplifts almost without exception. Such is music, and more than infrequently this relaxation has become a contribution of great men to mankind for all time.

The love of the open and of nature has given the world Darwin and Huxley, who might perhaps have otherwise been barkeepers or clerks in a [illegible] store. Boys who would rather roam the woods and ply the seven seas than confine themselves in the office or school room have produced men like Hornaday and Daniel Beard. The love of the beautiful has given us Raphael, Titian, Rembrandt and Rodin. It made a soldier of Florence Michael Angelo.

The restless energy and love of the rougher side of nature of Lieutenant Pike gave America Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, and the desire for the thrills of adventure in Lewis, Clarke and Fremont gave us the Great West. [illegible] there can be but little question that the [illegible] of an avocation leads not infrequently to a happy and most useful vocation. The following of a pleasurable bent or diversion on the part of a normal individual is a tendency toward progress in the world, and the natural following out of such an [illegible] rarely leads to anything other than good things, happiness not only for the individual but for man. Happiness is perhaps correctly defined as mental health and without it mere physical health is incomplete and unsatisfactory.

For most of us, however, it is not to follow our avocations as callings, but as methods to an end and not, as in some of the cases which I have mentioned, the great object [illegible]. The value of any drug or person or method in this age of efficiency must be measured by the results produced. Let us recall then some of the direct results of diversions in everyday life. Whether we will or not we must have diversions, and if these be deliberately chosen and well cultivated they become as friends and obedient servants; whereas, if we allow them to choose us or to direct us, they become our masters and often a detriment to true happiness and progress as exemplified in alcoholism, in the craze for [illegible] in the [illegible] the much [illegible].

The benefits of relaxation are by no means limited by what it gives to us in itself, even in pleasure, health and uplift. After the play comes a return to work with rested mind and refreshed body. Relaxation and play may be well looked upon as a preparation for work, but they are to be classed in the same light as sleep and food. None of our old sayings are more true or pertinent than that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Play is not to be looked upon as a luxury, but as a necessity, and as such its selection is indeed entitled to quite as much serious thought and careful education as in the choice and preparation for life's most serious work.

Modern Scepticism Is Only a New Credulity---Says Mr. G. K. Chesterton

By G. K. CHESTERTON.

The Distinguished English Publicist

THE vague sceptic bred in the modern towns goes wrong in a peculiar way. He is often a sceptic beause he is not a realist. He thinks a thing must be a fancy and not a fact precisely because his own vision of the fact is really a fancy. He thinks he is superior to a belief in it, when he is really only ignorant of the evidence for it.

Let me take what may seem a rather remote, fantastic example, but which happens to explain the point with some exactitude. In the Middle Ages pilgrims and travellers used to say that they had seen walking about in Africa men who had the heads of dogs. In most modern conversation and journalism this would be treated simply as a fairy-tale, and as such it would cause no surprise, however solemn the testimony or however saintly the witnesses. The vague modern notion is that between about 800 A. D. and 1500 A. D., all human beings were mad, and could in some extraordinary way believe anything they were told and see anything they believed. The modern man would suppose that those who believed in men with the heads of dogs might also, in the same way, believe in birds with the heads of cats or serpents with the heads of elephants.

I do not say that there are not extravagances of the mediaeval imagination that lend color to the comparison; but these belong really to another class, and do not concern the particular point here. I say that it would never occur to the uninstructed man, merely on reading that story, to think suddenly of baboons. And the reason is that he thinks he knows what a baboon is like. But he doesnt. He thinks a baboon's head is much more human than it really is; and he thinks this because he very often sees a number of suggestions, direct and indirect, that this is so, and very seldom sees a baboon.

The cloud of error is composed of many elements. It is partly the much more familiar sight of the little monkeys who sit on barrel organs and whose faces really are much more human and pathetic. It is partly one of the ten thousand trails of tosh that can be traced to the acceptation (and non-comprehension) of what is called Evolution: a vague idea that the largest apes must be in every way the nearest to Man. It could not fancy the Missing Link as having the head of a dog. It is partly, I seriously believe, a half-memory of old jokes and pictures in Punch—about how Darwin himself was like a monkey. But Darwin was not at all like a dog, and therefore Darwin was not at all like a baboon. For the truth is that the mediaeval pilgrims' description of the baboon is a remarkably accurate one. The baboon, and I think others among the anthropoid apes, has a snout, jaw, and chin all in one piece, and projecting far beyond his forehead in much the same proportion and direction as in the case, say, of a boar-hound.

He has not got the pathetic, pushed-in face of the little monkeys. Now when you see a beast with a muzzle projecting like that, the analogy of other beasts leads one to expect that he will go on four legs. If you find him loafing about (however groggily) on two legs he reminds you very much of a man, especially as he has hands and fingers impossible to a dog. So that really for a short and vivid description "a dog-headed man" is about as precise as could well be [illegible]. But though it is short and true, I have had to be very long in even beginning to suggest its truth. But the vital point is this: That the sceptic is "superior" because he does not know what a baboon is, and the mediaeval pilgrim did.

Or let us take another and homelier case. Suppose some very urbane intellectual, a man like Herbert Spencer, with a philosophy at once dingy and dapper, were asked by a child about the truth or value of a fable. Suppose, for the sake of argument, it was the fable of the Dog in the Manger. The intellectual, according to his particular theory, would probably reply in one of two ways. He would either say that these tales about animals thinking and talking like men were the remains of savage superstition; when Man thought the beasts as wise or wiser than himself; when he would worship monkeys or crocodiles; and when he personified everything, putting a spirit into a stone or a tree. Or, if his purely intellectual explanation were a different one, he might tell the child that the fable was an entirely artificial sort of allegory invented by the Greeks; that it described the relations of human beings, but dressed up in the form of appropriate animals merely for fun or legal fiction.

The point is that in either case he would suppose the Dog in the Manger to be a symbol of an unreasonable man. A real dog (he would imagine) would be guided solely by the Instinct of Self-Preservation (Amen!) and would not weaken his chances in the struggle for Existence (Hallelujah!) by claiming something that he didn't want. Now, if the intellectual arrived at this conclusion by either of the two chains of theory, his error would not be due to any [illegible]est link in those chains. It would be due to the fact that he had not got a dog. Anybody who has a dog of his own knows that the Dog in the Manger was a very doggy dog; and might easily be found in a manger as well as in a fable. Whatever be the reason in canine psychology, a dog really will eat food he commonly contemns and loathes rather than allow some rival animal to eat it. A dog will refuse bread if you give it to him; and eat it if you throw it to the birds. A dog will refuse milk if you offer it to him, and drink it if you offer it to the cat.

It may be inconsistent with Darwin; but it is not inconsistent with Aesop. The old fable, in this case at least, is really about a dog and not a performing dog. I do not say it is so of all such stories; the doctors of the Higher Criticism will be pleased to hear that I have serious doubts about the Historicity (loud cheers) of the stork who provided a tall German mug or Etruscan vase, when doing the social honors for the fox. But I think it might really be worth while to watch these old stories for things that are true, and not only for things that are not true. There is a very similar stratification of real human experience in such an ordinary proverb as "Let sleeping dogs lie", especially if they are as noisy as mine is.

All this is one of the weaknesses of our corruption that I should like to fight as long as I can fight anything. We might call it for convenience the New Credulity. There may have been a time when people found it easy to believe anything. But we are finding it vastly easier to disbelieve anything. Both processes save the human mind from the disgusting duty of distinguishing between one thing and another. There may have been, though I never came across them in life or literature, some kind of clodhoppers who believed that every legend was true. But we shall be a much stupider kind of clodhoppers if we believe that every legend is legendary. In either case the effort which human laziness resists is the effort of drawing a distinction. When the mediaeval traveller said there was an animal partly like a lion and partly like an eagle, he was romancing. When he said there was an animal partly like a man and partly like a dog, he was [illegible]. When a fable says that a fox entertained a stork to tea, the fable was fabulous. When it said a dog barked at cattle coming for their food, it was not fabulous. The other is that one has to use one's brains.

An authority not easy to introduce into such discussion puzzled a great many people by professing openly to bring not peace but rather division. And the more a man thinks of such things the more he will see, I believe, that the chief mental and moral duty is the duty of division. The unity and universality business generally means, not that I am at one with the Universe, but that I think the Universe is at one with me; and is looking after number one. I am pretty sure that a sound scheme of thought will have to be as logical as heraldry and cut through shields as with a hatchet.

The motto of the new world will be that you must draw the line somewhere. You must know by what tests you are going to consider the truth or the identity of anything or anybody. It is really true, I advise you for your own good. If a lady tells you a story, you must decide whether it is to be treated as a legend or a lie. If a gentleman visits you, you must make up your mind whether he is a man or a monkey.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes: "THINK OF DEATH AS A FRIEND, NOT A FOE"

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

THE main object of most human beings is to avoid death, and yet death is the only certain thing in life.

From the hour we draw the first breath we are going forward to meet death

Instead of regarding death as a foe, would it not be more sensible to think of it as a friend?

One who comes to take us on a delightful journey?

There are some advanced metaphysicians who talk and write about the possibility of living continually and perpetually in this body. George Francis Train declared he should do so. He believed he had overcome death. He believed he had acquired the life habit, and he meant to prove that there was no need of changing bodies

But his body is now dust.

Mary Baker Eddy and Helen Wilmans and Wallace Wattles and Eleanor Kirk all talked this same philosophy; all believed they had entered upon life eternal in this body on this earth.

Yet all are gathered to their fathers. All "changed their worlds"

All live, on other planes in higher states of Consciousness

RECRIMINATION

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Said Life to Death. "Methinks if I were you
I would not carry such an awesome face
To terrify the helpless human race.
And if, indeed, those wondrous tales be true
Of happiness beyond, and if I knew
About the boasted blessings of that place,
I would not hide so miserly all trace
Of my vast knowledge, Death, if I were you.
But like a glorious angel I would lean
Above the pathway of each sorrowing soul,
Hope in my eyes, and comfort in my breath,
And strong conviction in my radiant mien,
The while I whispered of that beauteous goal.
This would I do, if I were you, O Death!"

Said Death to Life, "If I were you, my friend,
I would not lure confiding souls each day
With fair, false smiles, to enter on a way
So filled with pain and trouble to the end.
I would not tempt those whom I should defend,
Nor stand unmoved and see them go astray.
Nor would I force unwilling souls to stay
Who longed for freedom, were I you, my friend.
But, like a tender mother, I would take
The weary world upon my sheltering breast
And wipe away its tears and soothe its strife.
I would fulfill my promises, and make
My children bless me as they sank to rest,
Where now they curse—if I were you, O Life!".

Life made no answer, and Death spoke again:
"I would not woo from God's sweet nothingness
A soul to being if I could not bless
And crown it with all joy. If unto men
My face seems awesome, tell me, Life, why then
Do they pursue me, mad for my caress
Believing in my silence lies redress
For your loud falsehoods? (So Death spoke again.)

"Oh, it is well for you I am not fair.
Well that I hide behind a voiceless tomb
The mighty secrets of that other place.
Else would you stand in impotent despair
While unfledged souls straight from the mother's womb
Rushed to my arms, and spat upon your face."

No doubt all come near the old scenes and influence those whose minds are tuned in the same key. at times.

Yet they have experienced that change which we call death.

To me this change seems desirable

I have seen three mature people pass through the change, and to each one it meant deliverance, and each face wore an expression of peace and joy and satisfaction after the great event had taken place

The most glorious music, if played continually, ceases to please the ear The most appetizing food loses its taste if continually taken, and life would pall upon the happiest heart if it underwent no change of death.

The good swimmer enjoys his sea bath best when lightly clad.

How much more delightful must be motion in space when the body is cast aside.

We have many bodies; the physical one meant only for earth

The astral body, meant only for the astral plane; the desire body, which is the vehicle our emotions have made, and which will eventually drop away, as the others will, and leave us in the spiritual body In each of these bodies we will have new and wonderful experiences. And we will pass onward from plane to plane, meeting those who have been dear to us on earth, and learning new truths and gaining new powers to help us when we again, after long periods of time, return to finish the work we leave undone here now.

Each one of us ought to think of these things, calmly and with reverence and with faith in God's great goodness; we should, in the midst of all our pleasures and pursuits and ambitions and occupations, give a little time every day to happy thoughts of that wonderful change called death; and we should know that just as we think of it, and just as we think of life here, so will that life be to which death guides us.

We are building our heavens (and our hells) as we pass along the earth. Cheerfulness, hope, good will, generosity, patience, gratitude, love, reverence, industry, truthfulness, admiration of the beautiful, the seeking for beauty in all things, order and system and harmony—all these qualities are stones which are being laid in the Mansion in the Skies which we will occupy.

Anger, revenge, hate, ill will, greed, and all the other unlovely faults of human nature, build hells for souls to dwell in until they work their way out into fairer realms.

Choose your material with care, then, and give a little time every day to thinking your heaven into shape, ready for the occupancy of your soul when it passes onward.

And think of death as your great, good, beautiful Guide, not as your hideous enemy.

Opportunity By Elbert Hubbard

THE greatest sonnet ever written by an American is the one entitled "Opportunity," by John J. Ingalls:

Master of human destinies am I
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait,
Cities and fields I walk: I penetrate
Deserts and seas remote, and passing by
Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late,
I knock unbidden, once at every gate
If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before
I turn away; It is the hour of Fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save Death, but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore;
I answer not, and I return no more.

Poetry must not be dissected analyzed, and put under the slide in the hope of finding in it exact and concrete truth. The value of poetry lies in its suggestion, inspiration, not in what it says, but in what it makes you think

* * *

The truth is, opportunity does not knock once on each man's door—it plays a regular tattoo continually, and because you miss one opportunity is no reason you will not catch the next.

In the lives of individuals there are pivotal points. We grow by leaps and bounds, by throes and throbs

There may be long stretches of fallow time when seemingly nothing is accomplished. Suddenly, behold! we take a journey, we meet a person, we read a book, hear a lecture Loss comes to us in the way of fire, disaster, death, and forever after we are different persons.

Paul, going down to Damascus to persecute the Christians, was stricken with blindness, and when he recovered sight he saw things he had never seen before. It was a pivotal point in the career of Paul—also a pivotal point in the history of the world

A few months ago the papers were full of news from Portugal. Revolution was rife, and the leader of this revolution, feeling positive that the tide had turned against him, committed suicide, when lo; instead of disaster, victory was pounding on the gates, and his colleagues and comrades swept on over his dead body to the success which their leader had not foreseen.

Cato committed suicide on the eve of victory.

Over and over again we find men ready to give up at the pivotal point when, if they had just kept on one day longer, opportunity would have burst in the door.

On June 18, 1815, across the battlefield of Waterloo strode at least two big men. One was an Irishman and the other a Jew. Indeed, whenever anything special is happening you will always find an Irishman and a Jew around somewhere

The Irish are psychic, but this time Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington, did not know whether he was beaten or not

Nathan Rothschild heard the army of the allies singing as they built their camp fires. No French were in sight. Young Rothschild made a guess that the Irishman had won

He pulled his saddle girth two holes tighter, mounted his horse and rode to tidewater, eighty miles, before the sun rose. He gave a note to a man in a fast sailing sloop, who carried this note across the channel and gave it to a messenger waiting on the other side.

This man sprang upon his horse, galloped away and carried this note to London, sixty miles in four hours.

The note was to the brothers of Rothschild and contained three words, Buy English securities."

They bought with all the money they had and all the money they could borrow. They stretched their credit until it was ready to explode. They bought at forty

The official post followed twenty-four hours later with the news that the Corsican was in flight English securities doubled.

This was a pivotal point in the career of the wonderful Rothschild family

It was also a pivotal point for the human race

It was also a pivotal point in the career of Arthur Wellesley, the Irishman. It fixed his name in history for all time.

* * *

Are things going bad with you? Well, size them up, look them in the eye, and then right about face. It may be a pivotal point in your career.

Everybody is "down" at times. The desirable thing is not to let the mood become chronic. Then, when opportunity arrives, seize her, and slide, glide and dip successward.

The Tyranny of the Weak - - By Dorothy Dix

BY DOROTHY DIX

IT is one of the inexplicable tragedies of family life that the strong are always governed by the weak. It is irrational and illogical, but it is the short-sighted person whose vision sets the bounds to the domestic horizon; it is the halt and the lame who are the pacemakers of family progress; it is the person of weak and hysterical judgment who decides the way the family bark shall be steered It is never the strong, wise, tolerant, far-seeing member of the household who rules it.

No other thing on earth so serves to put the brakes on human endeavor, or brings about so many avoidable calamities as the subservience of the strong to the weak, the subordination of the wise to the foolish. It is a great misfortune to humanity, but it is one of the noblest mistakes that mankind has ever made, and there are many excuses to be offered for it

Indeed, the very qualities that make a man or woman strong the wide comprehension, the ability to endure, the divine patience and pity make them the inevitable victims of the little souled and the weak. Just as an honest man is no match for a thief in a trade because he will not descend to offsetting trick by trick, so the stronger and noble cannot contend with the weak and pusillanimous, because they scorn to use the only weapon that would avail

You may see this illustrated in a dozen households of your acquaintances where there is an inequality between husband and wife. Invariably the weak one rules. If the man is wise, generous, broad, tolerant and the woman is silly, narrow, high-tempered and querulous, it is not he, but she who is the autocrat. Such a woman never gives up her own will, because there are no such egotists as fools She never suffers herself to be led up to a higher life, because she is too dull to have any aspirations But the man, just because he is broad and wise, and because he sees, as she does not, that in order to have any peace in family life, somebody must give in, somebody must use tact and discretion, he sacrifices himself to his weak wife

There are thousands of noble and splendid men that are chained to women without brains or hearts, and the nobler these men are the less fitted they are to deal with such wives. There is no argument that this type of woman can understand except brute force, and as a gentleman cannot beat his wife, no matter how much she needs it, these men are the helpless victims of the tyranny of the weak

How is a man to deal with a woman who has hysterics every time he tries to reason with her about her extravagance, which is ruining him? What can he do if she meets every suggestion with floods of tears? How can he stop her if she makes jealous scenes every time he speaks to another woman? He's helpless to change her. All that he can do is just to meekly submit and keep from stirring her up

Or the case may be reversed, as it very often is, and it is the woman with great intelligence and wide understanding and sympathy who is married to a bigoted and prejudiced man with violent passions. Then it is he who rules the family, and it is she who, seeing his littleness and realizing that there is nothing so unchangeable as ignorant stupidity, sets herself the task of adjusting her nature to his instead of trying to adjust his to hers. Let a man have a temper like a train of fireworks, he does not try to control it. It is his wife who spends her life walking on eggs for fear she will rouse the devil in him, trying to keep things hidden and out of sight that will vex him.

As between husband and wife, it is always and invariably the noble who gives way to the ignoble, the strong that surrenders to the weak, which is a disastrous thing for the children

Another pitiful illustration of this is the young man or woman who is bound like a slave at the chariot wheels of his or her parents, and who is crushed in the dust and ground to powder under the weight of an old man or woman's mossgrown theories. Not every father and mother understand the child they have borne or are fitted to decide its destiny Many an old hen hatches out a swan, and spends her life in trying to keep it from the water that is the habitat for which nature intended it, simply and solely because she has a dislike for water herself

All of us have known girls whose parents have broken off good matches because the father or mother didn't happen to like the way the man combed his hair, or had an aversion to his religion or race, or for some other reason equally as foolish. We have known talented girls who might have made fame and fortune on the stage but for some senile parent who had a prejudice agains actors.

We have known boys who were prevented from going where fortune called them by some silly and selfish old mother who wept when her Johnnie talked about leaving home. We have known other men whose lives were ruined because an opinionated father, who thought he knew what was better for them than they did themselves, forced them into some occupation for which they were unfitted, and kept them from doing the thing they wanted to do and could have done with profit.

It's the old story, the strong yielding to the weak, the wise ruled by the foolish, the swift young feet slowing themselves down to the tottering gait of age. It is what is divinest in us in its most idiotic aspect, and it explains as nothing else does the reason why the world's progress is so slow.

For in family life we have a remarkable example of the survival of the fittest—but the one who survives is the one who throws a fit whenever his or her sovereign will is crossed.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Presented by the Hearst Sunday Newspapers in Collaboration with the Famous Pathe Players in a Photo-Play Serial Novel

By Arrangements with the Eclectic Film Co.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS.

Sanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other, but she wants two years of thrilling experiences seeing life before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr Marvin asks to see what she has written While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell, sees the half-exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his nerveless grasp, while her lips whisper a strange message from the remote past.

Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription blank a very brief will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage Hicks, a racetrack man, whispers a suggestion to Owen, but the secretary refuses to have anything to do with him, for the time at least. Hicks and Owen introduce a reformed pirate, who tells Pauline of hidden treasure, and they take passage to the island of Nassau to recover the treasure

A clock-work bomb is exploded on the yacht chartered to seek for the treasure and Pauline and Harry (who had gone along as a half breed cook) narrowly escape death.

At the reception in honor of Signor Baskinelli, the distinguished musician, it is proposed that all the guests visit New York's "Chinatown." Baskinelli in league with Owen and Hicks, has arranged with some Chinamen to abduct Pauline and to kill Harry during the visit. The plot is partly carried through and Pauline is hidden by the Chinese within the hollow body of the joss. Harry after a terrific fight with the Chinamen, chops off the head of the joss, releases Pauline and the two escape.

FOR several months after old Mr. Marvin's death, Owen had kept to his cubby-hole room adjoining the financier's small, plain-furnished, workaday office. But recently he had got the habit of doing his work in the library, where the tall, pure statues looked down upon his skulking head and the grand old books that had borne their messages of good from generation to generation, held their high thoughts in stately contrast to his skilled and cruel plots.

Above the bowed bald head that was planning the death of a young girl to gain her fortune stood a figure of Persephone—child of innocence and sunlight—shadowed by black robes of Dis. Upon the coward who feared all but the darkest and most devious passages of crime shone high clear brows of Caesar and Aurelius, Gray folios of Shakespeare held up to the ambitious ingrate the warning titles of "Lear" and "Hamlet" and "Macbeth." And by his side brooded ever that mystic relic of the farther past—the Mummy, from whose case had stepped a daughter of the Paraohs in the likeness of Pauline.

But Owen thought little of contrasts.

He still chose to work in the library

He was opening his mail there on a morning in early May when he came across an envelope addressed in the awkward scrawl of Hicks. He tore it apart nervously, for if Hicks could be moved to write, it must be a matter of concern. This was the note within:

> "Dear Owen—No doubt he suspects you of foul play. He has seen his attorneys and is about to take steps to have you removed from the trusteeship."

The paper crackled in Owen's trembling hand. His watery eyes peered covertly around the room as he reached for his steadying drug.

Braced by the morphine, he read the letter again. So the Baskinelli incident had gone a little too far. Harry Marvin had sense enough to know that he would not have to fight three murderous Italians and a rabble of Chinese unless there had been a plot behind Pauline's peril. It might be best to go directly after Harry—to put him out of the way first. And yet, Owen pondered, there was no proof of anything wrong. Pauline was admittedly plunging into these adventures of her own free will. Nothing could be proved against him or Hicks.

He resumed his work. Among the letters lay an advertising dodger which had been dropped through the door. Owen glanced at it carelessly at first, then with keen interest as an idea seemed to strike him. He read it over:

> "BALLOON ASCENSION FROM PALISADES.
> Signor Panatella, the famous Italian Aeronaut, will make parachute drop from height never before attempted."

The ascension was to be made that afternoon from one of the amusement parks on the New Jersey shore of the Hudson.

Owen's nerves were beginning to flutter again. The fear that Hicks's note had instilled was returning.

"This is Providence," he muttered to himself, catching up the dodger. But he stopped and tottered back to the table like a stricken man. He braced himself by the table, reached in a drawer and found the stimulant.

After a moment he was strong enough to move around the room. He opened all the dark cases and groped inside. He looked under tables and behind the great couch. Surely there was someone in the room. Surely a clear-toned voice had repeated after him the word "Providence." But he could find no sign of life. Even the mysterious Mummy held its rapt repose.

Owen slipped through the door and up the stairs. He tapped at the door of Pauline's room. When there came no answer he entered swiftly, laid a paper on the table and glided back to the hall, back to the library.

From there he called up Hicks.

Hicks' domicles were so many and suddenly changeable that he claimed nothing so dignified as a regular telphone number. But he had scribbled on the bottom of his note the number of a saloon on the lower West Side. He would be there almost all day

He was there when Owen rang.

"Hicks, see here, I want to see you—directly

"I'll be right up; need some cash, anyway; broke," came a thick voice from the other end of the wire.

"You keep sober and you'll get the cash all right. But don't come here. If what you write is true, it would be dangerous. I'll come to you on the motorcycle. Where are you?"

Hicks gave an address. Owen hung up the receiver. He went up to his room and got into cycling kit. As he came downstairs he met Pauline, who was returning from a shopping trip.

"Good morning, Owen," she said brightly. "Do you know, I believe there is more peril in a drygoods store than on a pirate yacht. What parts of my new hat are left,"

"Only the becoming ones."

She sped on up the stairs. Owen opened the inner door of the front entrance and saw Harry sitting on the steps outside. He turned and stepped back into the library.

Pauline, after her first imperative inquiries of the mirror concerning what she considered her wild appearance, picked up the letters on her dressing table and began to run through them.

The large black type of an advertising dodger loomed among the letters. She read it.

"Balloon Ascension from Palisades. Signor Panatella"—— It was the same that had attracted the attention of Owen a short time before.

Pauline tripped down the stairs. To Harry, seated on the steps, enjoying the Spring sunshine and puffing a leisurely cigarette, appeared a mysterious vision.

He knew by the elaborate way in which she took her seat beside him and hid the piece of paper in her hand that she had some new whim in fermentation—something to ask him that she knew he wouldn't want to do.

"Yes," he said, moving along the step away from her. "I know you've just bought me the loveliest cravat, that I'm the nicest brother in the world, that I look so handsome in Springy things and—well, what it is?"

Pauline pouted at the other end of the step.

"I'm, going up in a balloon and jump down," she announced, "from a height never before attempted."

"Polly! You are going to do nothing of the"——

"No, I wasn't going to, until you grew so great and grand. I just wanted to go over and see him fly."

She tossed the dodger over to him. He glanced at it.

"Well, if you promise you aren't plotting any more pranks, I'll take you."

"That's a worth-while brother. It's a pink one."

"Pink one?"

"Cravat, of course."

Harry groaned. "Give it to the cook," he pleaded. "He wears 'em alive. If that fellow goes up at 2:30, you'd better hurry."

"I'll be ready before you are."

She rose quickly, but Owen, looking, listening, had time to close the door unseen, unheard.

At the rear of a little West Side saloon, Owen ended his daily "airing." He signalled with his horn, and Hicks came out. He was a bit shabbier than usual, and he had been drinking, but he was not intoxicated.

Owen locked his machine and taking his arm walked him rapidly up the avenue.

"What do you mean by writing to me?" demanded Owen. "Haven't I told you never to put words on paper?"

"Oh, I guess you got that house wired so nobody'll catch you," grunted Hicks. "Live wires, too—clever butlers, footmen, maids, chauffeurs, cooks; you're safe enough."

"You forget those are YOUR wires. They don't know they're working for me. Hicks, are you out of your head? Have you told Bemis that you and I are working together?"

"Sure not; but that butler is no fool, Mr. Owen."

"Was it from him you found out that Harry had the lawyers after us?"

"No—queer thing that, that—it wasn't."

"Who, then?"

"The little Espinosa."

"Espinosa—in New York!"

"Yes—met her at the Trocadero a week ago. She'd seen old Calderwood already. I guess she blackmails him—the old reprobate, and him the noble counsellor at law for Mr. Harry Marvin!"

"So you put her on the scent—for us?"

"Why not? The young fellow's been acting suspicious for a long time."

"You did very well. Where is she?"

"At the Bannerdale—living very quiet this trip; needs money, I guess. Do you want to see her?"

"I should say not. I haven't seen her in a dozen years," said Owen.

"Not since you tried to kidnap"——Hicks did not finish the sentence.

"Stop your mouth, man," Owen commended quickly.

"I wish you'd got away with it. It would have saved the troubles we're up against now."

"You just keep track of her, Hicks, and see that she gets everything old Calderwood knows.

"How about some money—I haven't seen the color of a roll since you put that fool Baskinelli into the game. Ain't you coming across?"

"Certainly; here," said Owen, handing over enough to sate even the predatory greed of Hicks. "Now, what I want you to do is to find me some one among your horse racing friends who is down and out enough to take a little cash job—at certain slight risks?"

"Yes—what?"

"I want a good rider on a wild horse. He could make a thousand dollars in an afternoon if the horse should happen to get wild at the right time and do the right thing."

"Hm'm," mused Hicks. "I wonder if Eddie Kaboff has still got his livery stable down on Tenth avenue. We might go see."

After ten minutes' walk Hicks brought up in front of a bill-plastered door in a fence. He held it open for Owen and they passed across a vacant lot to a large dilapidated-looking stable at the further end.

The short, dark man who sat in a tilted chair against the doorway and puffed lazily at a pipe, seemed to embody the spirit of the building and the business done there.

He was a man who had once—in the days of racing—been called a "sport." He might still be called "horsey" and would consider the term a compliment. But Eddie Kaboff's fame and fortune had both dwindled since the good old betting days when little swindling games larded the solid profits of crooked races. One by one his thoroughbreds had given up their stalls to truck horses, just as Eddie's diamond studs had given place to plain buttons.

His beady black eyes watched the two newcomers on their way across the lot, but he gave no sign of recognition until Hicks and Owen reached the door.

"Hello, Eddie," said Hicks.

Kaboff got up slowly and extended a flabby hand to his acquaintance. He was introduced to Owen, who let Hicks do the talking.

"What's new, Eddie?"

"Nuthin'"

"Still got that wild horse you never was able to sell?"

"Yep."

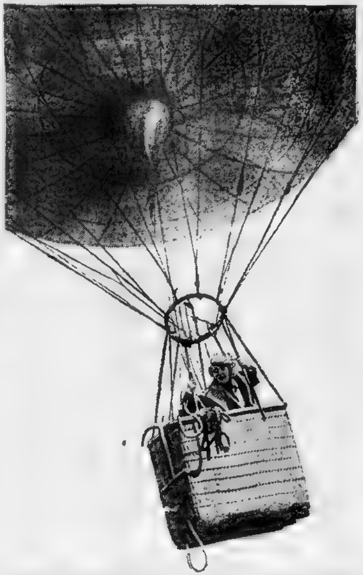
"Can you still manage him yourself?"

"I guess I could, but he ain't safe to take among traffic."

Hicks stepped close to Kaboff, talking in rapid whispers. The little man turned white.

"No, no; I'm too old for that kind of game," he said.

Owen drew from his pocket a roll of yellow-backs—the biggest roll Eddie Kaboff had seen since the days of "easy money."



This is from the Motion Picture Film of "Pauline" by the Pathe Players.

Pauline in the Basket of the Runaway Balloon After It Has Been Cast Adrift Through Owen's Plot.

"This much to try it," said Owen, "and as much again if you make good."

Kaboff's glance wavered a moment between the penetrating eyes of Owen and the money in his hand.

"Take it; it's yours."

The flabby hand closed almost caressingly around the roll. "We'll go in and have a look at the brute," he said.

They followed him through a line of stalls to a large padded box at the far end of the barn. A beautiful bay saddle horse occupied the box. Kaboff entered and called the animal, which answered by flying into a seeming fury, plunging about the box, kicking, rearing and snapping.

"Same old devil," muttered Hicks. "He'll do."

The sight of an apple in Kaboff's hand calmed the animal. It came to him and ate docilely while he slipped a bridle over its head. Once outside the stall, however, it began another rampage.

Hicks held a last whispered conversation with Kaboff, giving him minute instructions.

"I can just try it, you know," said Kaboff. "I can't guarantee to get away with it."

"As much again if you do, you know." said Owen as he started briskly away with Hicks.

The place that Panatella had chosen for the start of his balloon ascension was a field upon the crest of the Palisades above the amusement park.

Panatella had brought with him from abroad a reputation for dare-devil adventures in the air And he had proved his reckless courage in the several brief ascensions that he had already made on this side.

To-day, with his promise of the longest parachute drop on record, people flocked to the field from New York and all adjacent New Jersey.

In spite of his peculiarly busy morning, Owen had arrived back at the Marvin mansion in time to be told of the intended trip and invited by Pauline to join the party.

Owen saw a grim light flash from Harry's eyes. It told him plainly that he wasn't wanted, and, more, it reminded him sharply of the note he had received from Hicks. But Owen accepted the invitation.

Superstitious as the craven drug victim always is, he had let his mind's eye see a fateful hand in the coincidences of the day—the unexpected appearance of the dodger and the perfect working of his plans thus far. "Providence" was what he had been pleased to call it.

"I wish you wouldn't always invite that velvet-pawed servant on our trips," grumbled Harry to Pauline, as Owen went for his dustcoat.

"Owen is my trustee and guardian. You have no right to speak of him as a servant. Besides, when he's along he keeps you from being silly."

Harry stamped out to the garage, swung a new touring car around to the door, and soon, with Owen and Pauline, was speeding for the ferry.

Signor Panatella was superintending the filling of the great gas bag. He was a tall, lithe man in pink tights, beneath which his muscles bulged angularly, like the gas filling the balloon bag.

A Latin rapidity of speech and motion added to the pink tights made him comically frog-like, and even the abatis of medals on his breast could not save his dignity.

He bustled about giving orders to the workmen who were preparing to cut the ropes, then flitting back to the crowd to answer the questions of impromptu admirers.

Pauline had left the car and was standing between Owen and Harry near the rapidly filling bag.

"I wish I could talk to him, too—he's so cute and hippety-hoppy," she said

Owen stepped to Panatella's side

"Would you permit the young lady to see the balloon basket?" he asked.

"With pleasure," said the airman after a glance at Pauline. He led the way to the basket, and helped Pauline up so that she could look at the equipment—the anchor with its long coil of rope, the sand bags and water bottles.

She was plainly fascinated as Panatella explained the manner of his flight and his drop through the air. As she saw them attach the basket to the tugging bag she was thrilled.

At this moment there was a flurry of excitement on the outskirts of the crowd. A horseman on a beautiful bay mount, that was evidently unmanageable, came plunging and swerving down the field.

The crowd broke and scattered in front of the mancing hoofs that flew in the air as the vicious animal reared.

The horseman, clad in a somewhat threadbare riding suit, was a small man with beady black eyes that turned from side to side as he swayed in his saddle. He seemed to be afraid of his mount and to be looking for help. But it was remarkable that apparently so poor a rider held his seat and actually managed to bring the beast to a nervous stand some fifty yards from the balloon.

The little man looked around over the heads of the crowd. He caught sight of Owen beside Pauline near the balloon basket. The lifting of his riding crop might or might not have been a salute and signal.

"Oh, I wish I hadn't promised Harry not to go up. I know Signor Panatella would take me," sighed Pauline.

Harry had turned away to watch the actions of the strange horseman. Owen spoke to Pauline in a half-laughing whisper.

"You might scare him a little," he suggested.

It was the boldest thing that Owen had yet done.

Those words were the greatest risk he had taken in all his deeply laid plots against the life of his ward. He was always cautioning Hicks against risks of all kinds. But to-day the superstition of success overpowered him. He was sure that this time his plan to put away the one person thwarting his path to riches would carry itself through almost without a guiding hand.

So he dared to stand by the balloon basket and invite Pauline to death, with a smile on his thin lips and a light of sincere enthusiasm in his wavering eyes.

Pauline caught at the suggestion eagery. She sprang lightly from the little platform into the balloon car.

A murmur of mingled astonishment, applause and alarm rose from the crowd. Two of the workmen were cutting the last ropes that held the basket to earth. Ten others were holding it with their hands awaiting the airman.

Panatella purposely delayed the moment of mounting the basket. The tugging of the huge balloon against the strength of a dozen men gave impress to his feat, and he liked the state of suspense.

But the sound from the surprised throng called his attention now to a scene that made him forget affectation and effect. He started to run toward the basket, shouting peremptory orders:

"Out of the car; out of the car instantly, madame! You are risking your life."

His excitement infected the crowd, which surged forward.

Surging, it seemed to sweep with it the rider on the restive horse. For, as a hand was suddenly lifted in the midst of the crowd the horse apparently overcame the rider utterly. Towering an instant on hind legs braced to spring, it shot forward directly at the balloon basket.

The hand that had been raised was the hand of Raymond Owen.

All was happening so swiftly that neither Harry nor Panatella reached the basket before the maddened animal.

The crowd had given way in panic before it. Cries of fright were mingled with cries of pain as the beast charged straight upon the men holding the basket, felling and crushing them with shoulder and hoof.

For an instant a few desperate hands held to the wrenching car. Panatella had all but reached the platform; Harry was within arm's length of it, when, with a writhing twist the bag jerked the basket sideways and upward, knocking to the ground the last two men who had held it and whirling forth into the deathly emptiness of space a cowering, stunned girl, whose white face peered and white hands pleaded over the basket rim—peered down upon the upturned faces of thousands who would have risked their lives to aid, but who stood helpless in their pity, hushed in fear.

Far off across the field the strange horseman had been whisked in an instant by his vicious steed. He seemed to get control for a moment, to stop and stare upward at the balloon which was shooting higher and higher on a westward course. Then he gave rein to the beast, and its thundering hoofs echoed back for miles down the highway, as Eddie Koboff fled from the blackest day's work of his life.

For a moment Harry had stood dazed. It was as if the twanging taut of the ropes, as the bag tore almost from his grasp the most precious being in the world, had snapped the fibres of action in him.

The daze passed quickly, but in the moment of its passing the balloon, risen now five hundred feet in the air, had swept its way westward over a mile of ground.

Harry turned to look for his motor car. Standing as he was at the spot from which the balloon had ascended, he now faced a human barricade. With a shout of warning he charged at what seemed to be a vulnerable point in the files of wedged shoulders

The wall resisted. The throng was lost to all but the dimming view of the balloon. Harry swung right and left with his broad shoulders. He tore his way through.

The car was standing where he had left it on the outskirts of the field. As he approached it he saw Owen emerge from the crowd and hurry toward a runabout that had just been driven upon the field.

"What's the matter?" yelled a man in the machine, and Harry recognized the voice of Hicks.

"Miss Marvin—carried away in the balloon!" cried Owen in a tone of excitement that was not all feigned. He joined Hicks beside the runabout and they talked together rapidly.

Harry sprang to the seat of his touring car. It seemed to leap forward. He shot past the two conspirators and heard Owen's voice calling after him:

"Wait! Where are you going? I'll go with you."

"You're too late," shouted Harry bitterly over his shoulder. An envelope of dust sealed itself around the spinning wheels of the big machine as he took the road after the balloon

Steadfast but hopeless he fixed his eyes upon the unconquerable thing in its unassailable element—a thing that seemed to be fleeing from him as if inspired by a human will Death rode beside him at his breakneck speed, but he did not know it. He knew only that he must follow that black beacon in the sky—that he must be there when its flight was over—when the end came

He did not know that Owen and Hicks, in the runabout, were also following—that they, too, watched with an interest as deep as his, with a hope as poignant as his hopelessness, the dizzy voyage of Pauline.

To Be Continued Next Sunday.

To-Day's Prize Offer

As you read this instalment of "The Perils of Pauline," printed above on this page to-day, you noticed that Hicks recalls to Owen an attempt to kidnap some one that Owen and the girl Espinosa made years ago. WHAT WAS THE KIDNAPPING PLOT THAT HICKS REFERRED TO?

The details of that incident have not yet been written. That will be YOUR task. Read the instalment, study the situations, and write the details of this kidnapping plot that you think best fit those situations.

One thousand dollars in money prizes will be given for the best explanation of what happened there. Answers must reach this office not later than next Wednesday noon. Announcement of winners will be made two weeks from to-day.

Awards will be made according to the merits of the replies received, and those showing the greatest excellence in ingenuity, imagination, inventiveness and literary skill will be ranked in the order of merit.

Joan Sawyer to Show Dance Mad Boston Her New Steps at Shubert

Weber and Fields Coming to the Globe, and 101 Ranch Will Be Big Out-Door Attraction

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

In the language of the drama of today, life is just one dance after another. It is now your privilege to step right up to the Shubert Theatre and see how Joan Sawyer does it—to observe, if you choose, the difference between the one-step of Miss Sawyer and those of other principals of her profession who have gone before.

Miss Sawyer should have a happy week at the Shubert, for the appetite of playgoers has been whetted and nourished by a week of modern dancing at the Boston Theatre that ran late into the night and was distinguished by the multitude of trophies distributed among the amateur

If for nothing more than the good of her art Miss Sawyer promises more trophies and more bewildering dances than have ever crowded the stage of a theatre in this city. The young lady will bring her own company and her own musicians for this forthcoming onslaught of tangoes, hesitations and maxixes.

Like all of the most brilliant of our dancing artists, Miss Sawyer rose to fame from a humble position in the ranks of musical comedy. Her first claim to important distinction was achieved in a cabaret—a place where you eat and have vaudeville thrown in to make your forget the quality of the food and the size of the check. She soon became the favorite of New York's exclusive cabaret dancers, and it was only a step from a salaried engagement to the management of her own Persian Garden, which followed the same familiar rules of operation.

Between her vaudeville engagements and her Persian Garden, neither of which has staggered under the high cost of living, Miss Sawyer has managed to put in a very happy Winter and Spring. What she has laid aside for a rainy day is merely a magnificent tribute to the devotion of the public to food and dancing. Miss Sawyer is making a whirlwind tour of the large cities with a company of professional dancers from her own studio—if that is what she calls it—and Boston is the second city to be favored with this invasion of art and beauty.

If you are not exactly certain about the details of the modern dances, it may be well to remind you that Miss Sawyer has the secret and proposes to reveal it to the eager gaze of an anxious public at reasonable rates.

When Weber and Fields last appeared together in Boston it was at the Globe Theatre, which they had just taken under their charge. On the second day of their engagement Mr. Fields slipped in descending the stairs leading to the barber shop in the old Hotel Reynolds and broke his thigh, necessitating his withdrawal from the cast

In this connection a delightful story is told which bears upon the comedian's idyllic family life. At the time Mrs. Fields was seriously ill in New York, and he had been calling her up on the long-distance telephone several times each day, she talking to him through an instrument at her bedside. It was before the days of the "phone in every room of our hotel," and Mr. Fields had been talking from the theatre.

When the accident brought him to his own bed his first thought was for the sick wife in New York, and he insisted that a telephone be installed in his room at once. To do this required tearing down part of one of the walls at an expense of more than $100. For more than two weeks Mr. Fields called up his wife three or four times daily pretending that he was talking from the theatre and assuring her of his continued excellent health. The news of Mr. Fields' accident was kept from Mrs. Fields until she was strong enough to hear of it

Although the Globe Theatre was leased by Weber and Fields for their own productions, only one engagement was played there, and in that engagement Mr Fields took part in but one performance.

The big outdoor shows are approaching—a sure sign that the theatres must soon divide attention with acrobats, high divers and moving menageries. The 101 Ranch Wild West exhibition will be the first heavy traveling organization to reach this territory and will move into the old Huntington avenue grounds tomorrow for a week's stay.

The 101 Ranch show is not a circus, but it is a big affair in every way To avoid argument it is just as well to accept the statement of its representative that it is an educational institution that displays, as no other exhibition can, the wonders and product of our own Western country. There is probably no organization in the world that presents an entertainment of like character. The old-fashioned wild west show was made up of spectacular features designed on the story-book idea of the wild West. The 101 Ranch show has the spectacular novelties, but they form only a small part of the real exhibition. It is a more faithful picture of ranch life.

The influence of the theatre is discovered in odd places. Even the man who takes care of such unmentionable labor as painting signs for the drama may be struck squarely between the eyes with its thrills and its possibilities.

Which leads us directly to Charles L. H. Wagner, who devoted his talents as a sign painter to the theatres of Boston for a good many years. Now he is an artist of the other kind—the artist who flings himself into the spotlight and dares them to turn it away. Mr. Wagner has grown from signs to music, verse and elocution and his friends expect him to set a new record in artistic achievement when he makes his appearance in Jacob P. Bates hall at the Y. M. C. A. building next Thursday evening.

It will be a Wagnerian night down to its smallest detail, even though the star of the performance will be assisted by several other entertainers If you have any idea that painting signs is not conducive to a broad development of the highest things in art, you should remember that the entire program next Thursday—music, verses and whatever else is done—is the work of Mr Wagner. Genius is likely to uncover itself in almost any quart

Marcus Loew is getting ready to enlarge his field of operations. The main idea in Mr. Loew's mind at this minute is a plan for a chain of theatres that will encircle the globe. He says he has had the plan in mind for three years

That Mr. Loew is no pigmy in the field of vaudeville may be gathered from the fact that he now controls 117 theatres that stretch from coast to coast on this continent. With his world circuit added to his present holdings you may expect to be told that the sun never sets on the Loew theatres

[illegible] om New York that Mr. Loew is also hoping to strengthen his power in New England by acquiring the Julius Cahn circuit of theatres. If this is accomplished Mr. Loew will have new theatres in Portland, Lewiston, Lowell, Lawrence, Salem and Fall River

Shubert Theatre.

Joan Sawyer, a modern dancer, who has attained great popularity in New York during the past season, will appear at the Shubert Theatre for one week only beginning tomorrow night, in a series of modern dances, assisted by a large dancing company. Miss Sawyer brings with her a special [illegible] orchestra and there are said to be over forty dancers in the company. Miss Sawyer herself, assisted by three different dancing partners, will render her own versions of the tango, maxixe, the hesitation, the "three in one," and the unique dance which she calls the "Aeroplane Waltz." There will be an amateur contest at the close of every performance with silver cups as prizes

Boston Theatre.

Something of sentiment attaches to the engagement of Joe Weber and Lew Fields at the Boston Theatre for the two weeks beginning tomorrow night. [illegible] will it be their first joint appearance on a Boston stage [illegible] ten years, but it [illegible] also [illegible] last joint appearance [illegible] "Hokey-Pokey," the musical comedy in which the comedians will be seen, is the piece which they presented in connection with their Jubilee Reunion of two years ago. Perhaps it would be more proper to say that it is the framework of that piece studded with a number of new ensemble numbers and comedy scenes.

The most interesting feature in connection with the comedians' visit to town is the fact that they will appear at popular prices.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Fanny Brice, late feature of the Ziegfeld "Follies," will head the bill at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week. Miss Brice has scored an even greater hit in vaudeville than she did with the famous all-star cast of the "Follies," where she walked off with the honors of the piece. Another comedy feature of the week will be Bernard Rheinold, the cabman character actor, and his big company of comedians in a novel one-act farce comedy, "How Hoffmeister Did It." Other features will be the Great Ergotti and his troupe of Lilliputian acrobats Six Brown Brothers, a group of skilled musicians, Robinson Newbold and Marie Louise Gribben, in impersonations of comic opera stars; Ray-Mund, a mystery, and Dorothy Brenner, a dainty comedienne.

Wilbur Theatre.

The attraction at the Wilbur Theatre this week will be a new comedy by Robert H. Housum, "Sylvia Runs Away," which is presented by William A. Brady The engagement will open Wednesday evening. The leading roles will be played by Alice Brady and Geraldine O'Brien Sylvia is the typical and natural product of the tendency of the times in the average American home—a girl who thinks for herself and does things. She has a mind of her own and never hesitates to take advantage of the new American girl's prerogative. Altogether Sylvia is said to be in many ways an entirely new creation on the American stage. The type is one which is said to lend itself ideally to farcical exploitation

Castle Square Theatre.

In "The Man o' War's Man" Mr. Craig will give at the Castle Square the coming week a play that is thoroughly up to date, for it deals with scenes and events in the very heart of the present Mexican trouble. Opening at the Army and Navy Club in New York, its scenes shift to the American Consulate in Havana, and then to Vera Cruz, and it is in the last mentioned city that its two final acts have place. It is a play both of romantic love and of dramatic warfare, and its plot portrays the experiences of an American soldier who is thrown into prison, of his escape therefrom in disguise and of the manner in which he is befriended and aided to escape by Isabel Zore, a spy

Colonial Theatre.

"The Misleading Lady" will begin another week at the Colonial Theatre tomorrow. This amusing melodramatic comedy has caught the fancy of local playgoers and is likely to remain here for some time to come. It is a story of caveman romance applied to modern conditions

Tremont Theatre.

"Adele," now playing at the Tremont Theatre, begins its third week tomorrow night. This tuneful French operetta has created a veritable furore and bids fair to be a permanent guest for a Summer run There are love songs galore, in which "Adele," "Strawberries and Cream" are two of the most popular.

Globe Theatre.

"The Drug Terror," dealing with the illegal sale of cocaine and its attending evils, begins the third week of its engagement at the Globe Theatre tomorrow afternoon. This unusual photo play, with its pictures of vice and glimpses of life in the underworld, is proving a powerful weapon in fighting this deadly habit.

Majestic Theatre.

Beginning tomorrow afternoon, at the Majestic Theatre, "How Wild Animals Live," a collection of marvelous motion pictures of animals of forest and field in all parts of the world, will be on view twice daily. John W. Ruskin, the promotor of the pictures, claims to be associated with the pioneers of a movement that is about to revolutionize educational methods. The photographers penetrated the forest and jungle, kept watch on banks of streams and in branches of trees, risking health and even life itself, to bring a fuller knowledge of animal existence within the reach and sight of the general public. The element of humor is not wanting in the pictures. One of them shows a young bear with an inherited taste for honey and greater appetite than discretion, who goes hunting for honey on an old tree trunk and runs into a nest of bees.

Plymouth Theatre.

"Under Cover" will enter upon its twenty-third week at the Plymouth Theatre tomorrow. With this play still running strong in popular favor there is but little doubt that it will smash all previous records for long runs in Boston. "Under Cover" is a play for all people, with thrills and good entertainment mingled in its story.

Cort Theatre.

"Phyllis," which opened Thursday night at the Cort Theatre for an indefinite run during the Summer months, is to have its cast augmented by several comedians. It is not definitely settled whether Fred Walton is to be added to the cast, but it has been stated that additional comedy strength would be given to the piece, which by reason of its lively musical score, should remain many weeks in this city. The management is determined that "Phyllis" shall survive a few seasons on the road, after it has had a good chance to run indefinitely here and in New York.

Howard Athenaeum.

Violet Mascotte's "Aeroplane Girls," with Harry Lauders, Catherine Crawford, Zella Russell, Gladys Lloyd, May Hamilton and Iona Owens will be seen at the Howard Athenaeum this week The girls will introduce a number of new aero-songs and aero dances

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Jewell's Manikins will be the big feature at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week The management will also present a film product entitled, "War in Mexico."

St. James Theatre.

"The Stick Up Man," a comedy playlet with a burlesque on police conditions, will be a headliner at Marcus Loew's St. James Theatre the first three days of the coming week The bill for the last half of the week will be headed by "Live Wires," presented by the Desmond Gallagher Players.

Waldron's Casino.

Barney Gerard's "Follies of the Day" is the attraction at the Casino this week Gertrude Hayes, a clever comedienne, heads the company.

Orpheum Theatre.

The Desmond Gallagher Players in a comedy dramatic playlet, "Live Wires," will be one of the big features on the bill at Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theatre the first three days of the coming week It is an intensely interesting and gripping playlet, telling of a plucky telephone girl and her peculiar admirer

THE PERRY SISTERS AT PARAGON PARK.

Kinemacolor Pictures.

The presentation of the Kinemacolor motion pictures at the Tremont Temple for the past week attracted large audiences. The program for the coming week will comprise six of the very latest and most interesting subjects, including "Rambles in Paris," "Butterflies and Moths," "Golliwog's Motor Accident," "Water Babies," "A Story of Indian Frontier Life" and "A U. S. Naval Review."

Lexington Park.

On Memorial Day Lexington Park will open its gates for the ninth season. Situated in the historic town of Lexington, on the famous Paul Revere Route, Lexington Park is an ideal picnic and pleasure resort. Forty-eight acres of virgin pine, with many well laid-out walks and trails, with a large zoological garden, athletic field and baseball grounds and open air dance hall, furnish entertainment and recreation for everyone An excellent program of vaudeville and motion pictures has been arranged for the opening performance on Saturday afternoon and evening.

Scenic Temple.

The offerings for the coming week at the Scenic Temple will include a variety of subjects in motion pictures which have never before been presented in this city. A pathetic story of love and devotion in two parts, "In the Moonlight," will be featured.

Scollay Square Olympia.

Patrons of the Scollay Square Olympia will be offered another high class program this week. There will be several "headliners," including Walter, Fowler and Barrett, who will present a dramatic playlet, "The Surgeon." Another offering will be the Six Berlin Madcaps in a unique acrobatic dancing novelty. The remainder of the bill will include "Black Dots," a musical melange in colors; Connors and Edna, a refined singing act; and Mack and Stillwell, in a planologue.

Norumbega Park.

Norumbega Park, on the banks of the Charles River, opened its gates yesterday for the season of 1914. More beautiful than ever, Norumbega will surely hold its place as one of the finest amusement parks in New England. Tonight, in the big steel covered open air theatre, the first of the Sunday evening concerts, will be presented. During the week a vaudeville bill will be the attraction The Zoological Gardens will doubtless prove the centre of attraction for thousands Arrangements have been made with M. Papazeau, a Bulgarian artist, to take charge of the photographic studio.

Coming Events.

For the week of June 1 at the Castle Square John Craig will revive "The End of the Bridge," the first of his Harvard prize plays.

* * *

"Neptune's Daughter," a photoplay in eight parts, with Annette Kellermann in the title role, is to be seen at the Tremont Theatre on June 1.

Nantasket Boats.

Preparation is being made for the official opening of Nantasket Beach and Paragon Park on May 30. Despite the early season the beach has practically been open for the past two Sundays and the crowds have taken advantage of the Spring service afforded by the steamboat company. Many additions and innovations have been prepared at Paragon Park which will even surpass the fun and frolics of last Summer. Frederic L. Lane, general manager of the Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company, has promised extra late trips on this date if the weather is fair, as the opening of the season is expected to attract enormous crowds. Many patrons of the Nantasket line who have heretofore used the train service between Pemberton and Nantasket are taking advantage of the steamer trip between these two places as this part of the trip is far the more interesting.

GARDEN DANSANT AT PARAGON PARK

There is every promise in the signs of activity about Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, where the workmen are putting on the finishing touches in preparation of the inaugural of the tenth season next Saturday that this popular resort will be more inviting than ever.

Manager George A. Dodge has doubled the capacity of the Palm Garden This has been done by extending it toward the Weir River side, with the broad observation veranda continued. This added part, while a continuation of the Palm Garden, is quite distinct, being called the Palm Garden Dansant. It will be devoted strictly to dancing, and is equipped around the four sides with tables for the same kind of service offered in the original Palm Garden.

The Palm Garden Dansant will have its modern dancing sessions during the same hours as the Cabaret, and will be in charge of Mons. and Mme. Carmita who have conducted a similar famous establishment just outside of Paris. The "Dansant" will have a special tango orchestra, the Cabaret will have the popular Palm Garden orchestra of last season, and just outside in the bandstand which adjoins the Palm Garden veranda will be Mace Gay's Military Band in hourly band concerts.

Instead of two "cabaret girls" singing among the tables, as before, there will be eight, leaving no section of the great Palm Garden without almost individual entertainment. These "cabaret girls" will be Edna Leader, Mlle. Fifi, "those three Perry sisters," Billie Myers, Rosamond Martin, Marie Camilla and Amy Evans. For the inaugural cabaret program on the raised platform there will be the Maxwells, tango dancers, Floretta Clark, cabaret dancer; Mahr and Dwyer Sisters, acrobatic dancers, and Alice De Garmo, trapezist.

101 Ranch Wild West.

And now for the 101 Ranch Real Wild West.

The great picture of the life of the Western country as our fathers knew it will be placed on view at the Huntington avenue show grounds beginning tomorrow afternoon and for the week terminating with two performances on Memorial Day There will be a great street parade tomorrow morning.

Perhaps the most timely features are the Mexicans. Fifty of them, led by Jose Rodriquez are with the show. There are 100 Indians headed by picturesque Iron Tail, chief of all Sioux, whose profile adorns one side of the new nickel Fifty cowboys, the champion rough riders of the world, are collected with the aggregation. Among them are Vern Tantlinger, Chester Byers, Hank Durnell and "Long Bill" Lindsey. With these cowboys more than thirty cowgirls, many of them Oklahoma society beauties, help to keep up the almost incomprehensible pace for which the Ranch show is famous.

'SEE YOURSELF AS OTHERS SEE YOU'

Rose Marie Thebe, who has the leading feminine role in "The Drug Terror," the thrilling photo drama at the Globe Theatre, says: "We have all heard many times of seeing ourselves as others see us, but until the days of the motion picture such a thing was impossible

"I had often tried to see myself with the impartial eyes of others, to judge of the impression I made on an audience, to realize my own little peculiarities of gesture and carriage, where I could improve, what were my best points and wherein lay my weaknesses. But until I sat in an orchestra seat to witness for the first time my own performance in a silent role in a motion picture drama I knew nothing of the Rose Marie Thebe as she appeared to the audience which had paid to be entertained and amused

"Every actress who wants to make the most of her talent, to avoid mannerisms that hurt her work and learn how not to act as well as how to act, should be her own audience and her own critics. This is only possible by enacting a role before the emotionless camera, uninfluenced, as it is, by favoritism, prejudice or the before-performance dinner.

"It is worth more than a course at a dramatic school or a season of experience in a first-class company for her to thus see herself as others see her. This I realized when I saw myself come on the stage as a character in a play without words. What I learned will be of untold value to me. I detected little errors that could easily be corrected, business that might be made more effective and mannerisms that must be overcome. It was indeed a great lesson to me, and one that will be of great value to me, I hope, in my future work."

Old 'Iron Tail' in Custer Massacre

He is one of the few survivors of the Custer massacre, this venerable Chief Iron Tail, leader of all the Sioux. The "Old Roman" of his fast disappearing race, the embodiment of all that was noble in the American Indian, he stands alone today with a personality unimpaired by association with the white men.

Chief Iron Tail is with the 101 Ranch Wild West Show, which will be seen here in Boston for a week beginning next Monday afternoon, on the Huntington avenue show grounds, and will include two performances on Memorial Day. He leads over a hundred Indians, braves, squaws and pappooses, in the spectacle which Messrs. Miller Brothers and Arlington will offer on the annual visit here

Iron Tail has already been immortalized by having his profile chosen by the government for one side of the new nickel. Among the many Indian photographs examined his was chosen as representative of the most dignified of his race. He speaks no English, but through interpreters has told now and then his memories of the massacre of the "Fighting Seventh" which will always stand out as the most vivid event in the many years of fighting carried on by the government against the Red Man.

He was twenty-seven years old at the time and participated in the fight. He takes issue with the official report of General Miles, who stated that Sitting Bull led the Sioux warriors. According to Iron Tail Sitting Bull was "making medicine" over in his tepee during the fight and the forces were led by Chief Crazy Horse, "the greatest fighter our people have ever known." Rain-in-the-Face also was subservient in the battle, according to the venerable chief. Iron Tail bears his years well. The upright stature of his youth is yet with him. Like all men who have grown old gracefully he delights in children

WEBER RELATES THRILLING STORY

Very few theatregoers who have followed the stage careers of Weber & Fields know that at one time they were circus clowns. That was when they were fourteen years old. They were engaged to play Dutch clowns with Greniere Brothers' circus during the performance and to do an act in the concert, which was given after the main show. At that time they had advanced their salary to $40 weekly and considered that they had reached the topmost pinnacle of success.

An experience which they had in a small town called David City, Nebraska, led to their permanent separation from the circus business and sent them into "variety" where they were to ultimately achieve international success. There was a small college in that town and at the matinee performance the students raised a rumpus because some of the circus hands discovered a group of them cutting holes in the ladies' dressing tent and treated them to a not overly polite beating.

The students vowed vengeance and the word was passed around to everyone connected with the show to watch out for the "Hey Rube" signal that night. Those versed in the vernacular of the circus know that this is the rallying cry of the circus employes where there is reason to believe that concerted movement is to be made against the show.

ROW IS STARTED.

The students and the town folk came to the show that night in large numbers and the disturbance began about half way through the performance.

"Lew grabbed my hand when we heard the 'Hey Rube' call," said Mr Weber in telling about the experience, "and we both started to run away. Back in the tent we could hear shots being fired, women's screams and the cries of angry men. We hadn't gone more than a few hundred yards when we found ourselves on a railroad bridge. It was a single track trestle which ran across some sort of a stream. There was no moon and we could just barely see a few feet ahead of us.

"That stream looked to be a hundred feet below. We were picking our way gingerly across when around a curve about four or five hundred feet ahead of us we saw an engine coming toward us. We didn't have time to go back and if we kept on we knew we would be run over. The only thing left for us to do was to hang over the side from the ends of the ties.

HUNG IN MIDAIR.

"We lowered ourselves down and hung in midair while that engine and a train of freight cars ran by. Then we tried to pull ourselves up, but we weren't strong enough for that and we just hung there. We knew that we couldn't hold out for more than two or three minutes. Lew could swim a little, but I couldn't swim a stroke. As we hung there Lew promised to try and save me when we struck the water.

"We agreed that if either one survived the other he was to have all the belongings of the dead one and was to take care of the body and bring it back to New York. The memory of that whole scene is the most vivid of my life. We were thoroughly scared kids, but we seemed to have presence of mind enough to talk about our terrible predicament.

"Finally as we felt our hands slipping we agreed to drop together. We said good by to each other and when I said 'go' we both dropped. Then came the big surprise. We thought we were going to drop at least a hundred feet. As a matter of fact we fell only about twelve and instead of the raging stream we had imagined we fell kerplunk into about two feet of water. We just stood there and hugged each other for sheer joy. Two days later we gave in our notice and left the circus. It was held up in that town for nearly a week. Five men had been killed in the fight we ran away from."

ALICE BRADY, WHO APPEARS IN COMEDY DIRECTED BY FATHER

Alice Brady, who is best known as her father's daughter, returns to Boston this week in "Sylvia Runs Away," the new comedy which William A. Brady, her father, will present at the Wilbur Theatre Wednesday evening. The last time Miss Brady was seen here was only a few weks ago at the Shubert Theatre in the Gilbert & Sullivan revivals. She had important roles in "Mikado," "Iolanthe," "Patience" and "Pinafore." She has also been a feature of Gilbert & Sullivan's "Yeomen of the Guard" and "The Gondoliers" and in "The [illegible] Princess."

Miss Brady is more familiar to Boston theatregoers in musical pieces, and this is rightly so, for it was at the New England Conservatory of Music that she was educated for the lyric stage. But her appearance the coming week in a straight comedy role is nothing new for her. In comedy and the drama she has done distinct bits in such plays as "The Things That Count," "A Thief for a Night," "Little Women" and "The [illegible]."

Miss Brady was educated in a convent in New Jersey. She is the daughter of Mlle Rene, from whom she inherits her talent and her liking for the stage, and resembles her mother greatly in personal appearance. She is a rare combination, as she seems to be equally gifted dramatically and musically. As a daughter of William A. Brady she gives promise of perpetuating an illustrious name in theatrical history.

As a vice, intemperance is not half the menace; the curse of drink has been so thoroughly shown, so ably fought by the clean-lived that ALL know its folly.

BIG, THRILLING, HEART INTEREST STORY
Smith, a drug clerk, becomes addicted to the "Coke" habit. His pilfering of the drug suggests a profitable trade to Andrews. A system of supply and distribution is organized: the most terrible of all is the method of securing NEW CUSTOMERS for the traffic, money flows in to the promoters, then the blight of "Coke" casts its spell over the home of the now "Coke King." So busy is he creating new victims, establishing new outlets that he does not discover the disruption of his own home until too late. The story of "Roger" and his rapid descent down the pathway of "Coke" is but the story of many brilliant young men, who knew not the dangers of that terrible "First Time." THE NIGHT LIFE OF THE UNDERWORLD—THE SENSATIONAL POLICE RAIDS—THE THRILLING FIRE SCENE—MAKE "THE DRUG TERROR" A MASTER MELODRAMA. (TONIGHT USUAL CONCERT 10-15-25c.)

WOMEN IN ROME COUNCIL SOLVED LIFE PROBLEMS

—REV. DR. ANNA SHAW

American Delegate, Summarizing Work of Congress, Says It Advanced the Suffrage Cause.

Special Wireless to Boston American.

ROME, May 23.—The quinquennial International Council of Women, which has been in session here for two weeks, has finally adjourned after having discussed all of the greatest problems of woman—her life, labor and position in modern society.

The Rev. Dr. Anna Shaw, one of the American delegates, who the press of Rome characterized as "one of the most striking and most interesting figures in the Congress," told me tonight that the women of the whole civilized world must feel proud of the work accomplished here by their sisters.

She said that a new light had been thrown upon many questions, as well as an understanding reached tending to solve some of the most important problems, all of which are destined to have wide-reaching results.

Continuing her summary of the work accomplished, Dr. Shaw emphasized what she declares is the most important practical advance ever made by women.

FREE DISCUSSIONS OF SEX.

She said:

"This is the first time women have dared to face and discuss problems hitherto shunned or only superficially touched upon—the question of sex, the sexual education of children, heredity and the means of preventing white slavery.

"The paper submitted by the Marchioness Lucifero on the delinquency of minors, its causes and the means of prevention, contained practical suggestions that all the countries in the civilized world must accept as deserving of immediate consideration and adoption.

"We are determined to succeed, and all the gifts and tenacity of character characteristic of our sex will be utilized to solve the most important economic questions regarding women. The rate of payment of wages to women workers; establishment of maternity hospitals; the protection and education of children, and all ailments of the nations' prosperity, these questions have been thoroughly threshed out by this great body of the most representative and most progressive women in the world. Surely the views there promulgated will receive the earnest consideration of every government.

SUFFRAGE CAUSE ADVANCED.

"The greatest single achievement of the Congress undoubtedly was the tremendous aid we have given to the cause of woman suffrage in a serene and dignified way. Wherein the Congress has been conducted in a scientific manner and wherein its members have dealt with ponderous matters of international importance, it will prove that cultured women are at least as fit as men to contribute to the progress of humanity. Of all the numerous, preceding congresses of women, the present one was the most satisfactory and the most promising in practical results."

George V. Decides for Derby Night Ball

Royal Society Function Will Take Place at Devonshire House.

LONDON, May 23.—It has been definitely decided by the King that the usual Derby night ball shall take place this year, notwithstanding the fact that the court will not then have fully emerged from mourning for the late Duke of Argyll. This ball will take place at Devonshire House.

The King will give his customary dinner to his fellow members of the Jockey Club earlier in the evening, and the whole party will then adjourn to Devonshire House, where the Queen will have dined with the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire.

The Prince of Wales will remain for the dance, the first large ball His Royal Highness will have attended.

Panama Fair Envoy Sees Leipsic Exhibit

Senator Campbell of Baltimore Also Attended German Reichstag.

BERLIN, May 23.—Peter J. Campbell, State Senator from Maryland, a commissioner for the Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, arrived early this week with J. Cookman Boyd and John J. Hanson of Baltimore, with whom he has been making a tour of South Germany.

Senator Campbell visited the Leipsic exhibition, and while here also found time to attend a session of the Reichstag. He sailed on Thursday from Bremen on a steamer taking him direct to Baltimore.

Spiering Will Direct Big Berlin Concerts

American Conductor Agrees to Produce Novel Compositions There.

BERLIN, May 23.—Under an agreement concluded this week Theodore Spiering, the American conductor, will direct a series of important special concerts with the Philharmonic Orchestra next season, at which a number of novel compositions of the ultra modern type will be produced.

The series will bring the American leader for the first time into direct competition with the most famous German virtuoso conductors on their own soil and promises to arouse more than ordinary interest.

JORDANS IN PARIS.

PARIS, May 23.—Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan of Boston have arrived at the Ritz and will remain here until mid-July.

Historic Parade to Mark Peace Centenary Ball

Duchess of Marlborough Will Portray "Columbia" at Albert Hall.

Special cable to Boston American.

LONDON, May 23.—Great preparations are being made for the Peace Centenary ball, which takes place at Albert Hall June 10. All the prominent English and American hostesses in London are taking part.

The Duchess of Teck is chairwoman of the ladies' committee and Lady Paget has charge of the organization of the procession.

A replica of Columbus' ship is to be moored as though at the quayside in front of the organ and from this Columbus and his companion will witness processions illustrating the development of America.

First come the Aborigines, then Sir Walter Raleigh and the Virginian settlers (in this young Mrs. Waldorf Astor will appear), then the Pilgrim Fathers, the Dutch founders of New York, then the French settlers of 1682, then William Penn and the Quakers, followed by George Washington and big contemporaries.

The final procession will be the Burghers of Ghent and the signatories to the famous treaty. Then comes Canada, an emblematic figure, followed by Lady Maud Warrender as "Britannia" and the Duchess of Marlborough as "Columbia," each with their attendant States and colonies, and as a finale these two characters will receive congratulations from the great nations of the world.

Weingartner's New Opera Scores a Hit

Grand Duke of Hesse Honors Boston Symphony Leader.

BERLIN, May 23.—Felix Weingartner, the famous orchestra conductor, scored a brilliant triumph with his new opera, "Cain and Abel," which was produced in Darmstadt for the first time this week.

Critics are acclaiming it a work of genuine creative inspiration. The opera consists of one act and occupies only a little less than two hours. The scene is laid in the Garden of Eden and the principal characters are Adam and Eve and Cain and Abel, all treated allegorically as figures symbolizing the struggle between the good and evil forces in man.

Adam was sung by Robert Perkins, an American baritone, and Frau Weingartner sang Eve. The work abounds in beautiful melody. One number is a long duet between Abel and Ada which is said to stand comparison with the finest love duos in operatic repertory. At the close the composer received an ovation.

The Grand Duke of Hesse thereupon conferred upon Herr Weingartner the title of general music director, he to have complete charge of all public concerts and operatic performances in the Grand Duchy.

Rare Titian Is Found in an Austrian Town

LEMBERG, Austria, May 23.—A famous painting signed "Itanus P." has recently been found in the museum of Count Ossilinski, a notable citizen here. The fact that the painting was a genuine Titian seems to have been unknown to its owner and was quite accidentally discovered by a rich Polish nobleman and art connoisseur, who happened to be the guest of the Count.

The painting represents an old man in a fur coat, the face being beautifully executed and well preserved, while the rest of the canvas is bedaubed over in a very crude manner. It is undoubtedly a chef d'oeuvre of the Italian master, and was probably executed between 1516 and 1518.

Wilhelm May Send Crown Prince Here

BERLIN, May 23.—It is believed in court and official circles that soon after the return of the German Emperor from his Mediterranean cruise, an announcement may be made concerning the future movements of the Crown Prince.

The proposed tour of His Imperial Highness in South Africa was cancelled by the Emperor's express desire, but the belief is now entertained in Berlin that the Crown Prince may, if not immediately, a little later be permitted to satisfy a long cherished desire to visit the American Continent.

This, however, depends on the course of events between the United States and Mexico.

700 London Theatre Folk in a Big Revue

LONDON, May 23.—Stagefolk are rehearsing for the merriest event of the season, the theatrical garden party fixed for June 23. The chief event this year will be a revue, for nowadays the revue is as inevitable as the budget and almost as complicated.

This year's effort is to "stretch back into farthest antiquity and to reach forward into the unknowable"—and after all, nobody could ask for much more than that.

The general direction of the show is in the hands of Gerald Maurier, with some 700 actors and actresses under his command.

Lloyd's Premiums on Mexico Risks Lower

LONDON, May 23.—At Lloyds there is an impression that the trouble between the United States and Mexico will not be of long duration, and lately premiums covering different risks arising out of the situation have gone down.

Nevertheless, underwriters have assumed responsibility for a large amount of cover on Mexican risks, their commitments being nearly $5,000,000.

Policies are still issued on shipments to Mexican ports, but as many [illegible] seized after discharge, the business is now restricted.

Instalment Plan for Prince

King George Aids Poor Teck

Unable to Pay for Costumes

PRINCESS ALICE OF TECK.

LONDON, May 23.—Royalty launched a new one last week when the Prince Alexander of Teck, much to the surprise of aristocratic English society, made arrangements to buy a new wardrobe for himself and for the Princess on the instalment plan.

The Prince and the Princess, recently appointed as the Governor-General and first lady of Canada, discovered that $15,000 would be needed to buy the official robes for their new position. Prince Alexander needed $10,000 for clothes and the Princess needed $5,000. Being a little short, the Prince appealed to his royal sister, Queen Mary, and the latter called the King aside and disclosed the predicament of her brother.

Much to the joy of the new Governor-General, Their Majesties are to furnish the credit—the Prince is to pay in instalments lasting over two years, by which time his salary as Governor-General can be used to help square the debt with the King. Tales ere this have been told of the poverty of the poor Prince. He was too poor to furnish more than three rooms of the six in the vicarage at Windsor, which was granted him as a residence by Queen Mary.

The Prince is the third son of the late Duke of Teck. He is forty years old. The Princess was Alice of Albany, daughter of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Albany. During the lifetime of King Edward she was shown many royal honors, and her sister-in-law, Queen Mary, is also attached to the Princess. She is an extremely cultivated Englishwoman, fond of literature and music and a musical and literary critic of much note. The home life of the Tecks is ideal, in spite of the need of funds at times. They have two sons and a daughter.

'CHIC' PARIS GOWNS WORSE THAN HIDEOUS STYLES OF '80

Tendency Is Toward Superabundance of Drapery. Basque Popularity a Hopeful Sign

By MME. RENEE DUVANT.

Special Cable to the Boston American

PARIS, May 23.—The excessive liberty given to individual caprice in the existing fashions is already producing sad results. Really artistic makers of costumes find in it the opportunity for the creation of superb effects, but for the million and one bunglers it is the excuse for heart-breaking ugliness.

The cry has gone forth in consequence that French elegance must be saved. There is danger that this cry may be misunderstood. The elegance that is typically French has no need to be saved. It is not imperilled. But it is true that many of the costumes that have been seen in the chic quarters of Paris in the last week are worse than the hideous styles of the memorable year 1880, to which the adjective "upholstered" was aptly applied.

A tendency toward a superabundance of drapery is again threatened. Indeed, in the ateliers of the third-class dressmakers, who are chiefly incompetent imitators, it has already developed.

Some feminine figures on the streets look like badly wrapped bales of merchandise. Others, at a distance, might be taken for those of Chinese mandarins. Others have [illegible] graceful outlines of a stage [illegible] grated into bad, are not easily allied.

Hence, good taste may as well make up its mind to suffer sore affliction for a great part of the year.

One of the hopeful signs is that flounces are yielding place to the extended over-skirt or basque, but on the other hand these are taking upon them greater and greater amplitude. The saving feature is their simplicity.

There is an interesting variety in belts. Among the most effective are those that are in form from the costumes of the field marshals of the First Empire. The color may be such as suits the wearer's fancy.

With full dress the buttonless suede gloves, of natural color, very long and very supple, is the supreme chic.

Bedrooms in Black Latest London Fad

LONDON, May 23.—Fashionable women, who change their rooms with the seasons, are going in for an entirely new fad which comes to London via Paris.

It is the black bedroom centred with a giant four-poster in white enamel, or in silver draped with a Fillet and Flanders lace over black satin.

CZAR'S NEW BAN ON THE JEWS PROVES PERIL

Forbidden to Be Directors of Corporations; Financial Panic Threatens Russia.

Special Cable to Boston American.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 23.—That Russia's very existence is threatened in consequence of the latest hostile act directed by the government against the Jews is the opinion of many conservative, well-balanced persons prominent in the affairs of the empire. Even the most rabid Jew haters deplore the resolution of the committee of ministers, approved by the Czar, limiting the rights of Jews to be directors in corporations and to possess landed property as the most impolitic step the government has ever taken.

The restrictions which are now in force, affect specialy the sugar industry in South Russia, which is almost wholly in the hands of the Jews. According to the resolution, sugar corporations, like all others, may possess only 540 acres of land, whereas many of them now own 27,000 acres on which they grow sugar beets.

The Jews, forbidden to be managing directors of any corporations already selling securities, are refusing to have their money invested in concerns whereof they are denied the possibility of control.

The result of this is shown in the stock exchange, where almost every security has been raided and the price sent down to next to nothing.

Efforts of the big banks seem futile, so far as checking panics is concerned.

The news from crop growers is anything but encouraging and, despite the enormous orders which metallurgical societies have in hand, there is no prospect in the market for Russian securities improving.

Minister of Finance Barks has gone suddenly to Livadia in response to telegraph orders to make a report to the Czar on the state of the money market. Seldom has a minister been so severely criticized.

The fact he is of Jewish origin only makes him more unpopular among the Jews, who regard him as a renegade of the worst type.

The fate of the policy inaugurated by Minister of the Interior Maklakoff may as yet be only surmised, but one fact, pointing the way the wind blows in Russia today, was the Dumas' carrying by a majority vote of 186 to 95 a censure of the government.

In any other country such conduct as characterizes the present cabinet would work its own downfall.

Mr. Lwoff, whose moderate opinions never have been questioned, voiced the feelings of the larger part of Russia today when he declared the present policy of the government would bring the country to ruin.

"Ignoring the necessity of urgent reforms," he said, "is inviting Russia's destruction.

"Under these circumstances," Mr. Lwoff continued, "The moderate Conservative party thinks it is its solemn duty to show its fidelity to the Crown by warning it of the dangers that threaten."

Parisians Freed from Hat Style

"Stovepipes" Introduced by English Yield to Sensible U. S. Headgear.

By MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE.

PARIS, May 23.—Once upon a time everything in France came from England; not only our clothes, but also our soiled linen, which was sent across the Channel to be washed and then returned to Paris with an immaculate whiteness.

In other words, Paris was in the hands of the English and they decided what clothes should be worn and imposed that decision upon Europe. In due course came the silk hat and, willy nilly, Parisians were obliged to adopt this awful form of headgear.

America, by inventing more practical head coverings, has, to a certain extent, liberated the world from these hideous "stovepipes," which England was pleased to impose upon us, and we are profoundly grateful to the United States for this blessing.

King George Invites "Week-End Guests

British Ruler and Queen Mary Entertain Simply in Norfolk.

LONDON, May 23.—From now until August, King George and Queen Mary will lead the season in London, but they will take their week-ends at their own quiet home in Norfolk.

There they entertain many guests, and these invitations are particularly valued. They are usually for a visit from Saturday till Monday.

The arrival is usually at tea time, and tea is a very cheerful meal. The whole house, in contrast to the severe state of Windsor, is like a perfectly run country house. Dinner is late and is followed by bridge, music or any ordinary social pastime.

On Sunday morning the King and Queen and their children attend church, and their guests are expected to do likewise.

Czar Curbs Russian Critics of U.S. Policy

Disapproves "Unwarrantable Attacks" in Newspapers Over Mexico.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 23.—The recent attacks on the United States by various Russian newspapers, notably the Novoya Vremia, in regard to the Mexican imbroglio are reported to have incurred the displeasure of Emperor Nicholas, who orders the criticisms to cease.

The Czar is said to have issued orders from Livadia expressing his disapproval of the "unwarrantable attacks" against the Washington government, with the result that a remarkably subdued tone is apparent in the newspapers within the last few days.

Aged King Peter Would Abdicate

Advised His Second Son Is Too Young to Become Ruler.

GENEVA, May 23.—It is an open secret in European diplomatic circles that the aged King Peter of Servia wishes to abdicate in favor of his son and settle down in private life in Geneva. His Majesty has a large circle of private friends here, he having passed ten years here for the education of his two boys.

For more than a year past private emissaries have been on the lookout trying to find a suitable residence for the old King, but the notorious conduct of his son and heir to the throne has somewhat disarranged his original plans, and he is advised that his second son is still too young to assume the responsibility of a ruler.

The day after the assassination of King Alexander and Queen Draga, King Peter told the Boston AMERICAN correspondent—he was then Prince Karageorgevitch—that he abhorred the terrible crime, in which he took no part whatever. He added that he was too old to accept the throne, but that he had no choice in the circumstances. As soon as the affairs permitted he would return to the quiet life of a country gentleman in Geneva.

London Hires Paris Street Traffic Expert

M. Mariage Will Get $1,250 for Reorganizing Tramway System.

LONDON, May 23.—The growls have hardly ceased on account of the appointment of an American railroad man as managing director of a great English railway before the news is published that a French traffic expert has been invited to reorganize London's tramway and autobus system.

The London County Council has employed M. Mariage, the man who has made the street traffic of Paris the best organized in the world. He does not speak a word of English.

M. Mariage is to receive $1,250 for a brief stay in London, and what he will achieve in that time all London is waiting to see.

Herricks Are Hosts to Danish Royalties

PARIS, May 23.—Ambassador and Mrs. Myron T. Herrick are now leading a most strenuous social life. They sat with the King and Queen of Denmark in the royal tribune at Longchamps during the sovereigns' official visit here the other day, and figured prominently at other entertainments given in honor of the King and Queen.

The Herricks planned to attend the Roosevelt-Willard wedding at Madrid in June, but the date clashes with the International Chamber of Commerce Congress sessions, in which the Ambassador is greatly interested, and he will be compelled, therefore, to remain in Paris.

Shuberts Acquire 40 Foreign Plays

Henry Amberg Says Operettas Include Notable Hungarian Successes.

VIENNA, May 23.—Henry Amberg, of the Shuberts, has arrived in Vienna to complete negotiations for the acquisition of a number of plays and operettas.

Mr. Amberg, speaking to the Boston AMERICAN correspondent, said:

"So far we have acquired some forty plays and operettas for our theatres. The chief of these are: 'Polenflut,' the success of the Vienna season, by Oscar Nedbal, of this city; 'Juxbaron,' by Walter Collo, of Berlin; 'Goldregen,' by Zerkowits of Budapest; 'Endlich Allein,' by Alexander Brody; 'Old Hassliche Brant,' also by Brody and "Innocens," by Pastor of Budapest.

"Mr. Shubert and myself were struck by the large number of really talented young men, both playwrights and composers, to be found in Budapest. The Hungarian musicians show a decided originality of invention and orchestration which bid fair to open the theatres of the world to them."

New Duke of Argyll Shy of Matchmakers

Young Niall Campbell Greatly Sought for by Ambitious Dowagers.

LONDON, May 23.—Niall Campbell, the young new Duke of Argyll, has always been greatly sought after by match-making dowagers, but has shown no disposition to wed.

Miss Elisabeth Campbell, his sister, also has refused many offers of marriage. She is handsome, eccentric and an expert player of the bagpipes.

American heiresses anxious to become British Duchesses now have the choice of three dukes only, the Dukes of Argyll, Leinster and St. Albans. The Duke of Leinster is, unfortunately, consumptive. The Duke of St. Albans is also delicate and a recluse. He is entirely unknown, socially speaking.

The Duke of Argyll, however, is strong and healthy and is considered clever.

Baby Son Anticipated by Princess Arthur

Inheritance of Dukedom of Fife Depends on Event in July.

LONDON, May 23.—Prince and Princess Arthur Connaught, whose wedding at the Chapel Royal, St. James' Palace, on October 15 last, was the occasion of much popular rejoicing, are looking forward to a happy event in their family about the end of July.

Princess Arthur is the only Duchess in her own right in England. If she has a son, that son will in due course inherit the Dukedom of Fife.

But if she has only daughters, none of them can inherit it. By the terms of the patent it will pass to her sister, the Princess Maud, and if the Princess Maud has no sons then it will expire.

AMERICAN HEIRESSES LESS POPULAR NOW WITH BRITONS

Fewer Fortune Hunters Among Nobility Says Countess of Warwick—London Society Notes

By the COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 23.—I am often asked questions concerning the position of American women in London society. It is a most interesting topic of conversation, and this is my excuse for mentioning it now. There can be no doubt that their position has changed considerably in the past few years and not for the better. Indeed, unless a newcomer from the United States can add to the necessary wealth and social charm the advantage of falling into the right hands, her case is wellnigh hopeless. The position of Americans who married into English aristocracy years ago has been rendered secure. Custom and friendship have made them part of society itself and, speaking generally, a popular element in it. With newcomers the case is different.

Enthusiasm for Americans as Americans is dead or dying. I could not tell you why. It is just an affair of the fashion of the times. Even the American heiress seems to languish somewhere behind the chorus girl in the matrimonial market. It is to the last named that the lad of good family and established traditions seems in desperate haste to offer his hand and heart. It is, of course, an unfortunate fact that many of the Anglo-American marriages in society turn out badly or, at least, unhappily, but society in England is not given greatly to retrospection or introspection, and I do not think that the past has the slightest influence on the present. There are still plenty of men found running about after American heiresses, but they are seldom eligible or even desirable from the point of view of a shrewd woman. Unless she is careful they do her more harm than good.

JUST INDIFFERENCE.

I wouldn't be thought to suggest that there is any American feeling. I have never noticed any hostility, but only indifference, and plenty of that. In King Edward's time things were different. A new and pretty face and vivacious manner appealed to King Edward, and he told me on several occasions that the smart American woman amused him. Some got an entree to court, others entertained the King occasionally. But today no newcomer from the United States can hope to near the court except officially through the American Ambassador. The most lavish entertainment in London wouldn't draw King George and Queen Mary—they wouldn't be interested.

King Edward had a very keen and subtle sense of humor. Sometimes when an act of royal graciousness sent a hostess into the seventh heaven of social ecstacy he was laughing in his sleeve, having correctly foreseen everything that would [illegible]. Again when he came to the throne he was a man of mature age and his family had grown up. His frank liking for the American element set and encouraged a fashion that has died out. I wouldn't say an American woman cannot now succeed in making her way if she is clever, patient and painstaking, but as far as succeeding in a hurry is concerned she might as well seek to storm the Rock of Gibraltar single-handed. She must build widely and carefully and not only be advised wisely, but must accept that advice and act upon it.

THE WEEK'S DOINGS.

With this little dissertation off my mind I must pass on to the week's doings. It has been a very busy time, indeed, with the pace quickening as the days went by. A favorite form of entertaining this season is the dinner dance—that is, a hostess gives a dance to which she invites anywhere from 100 to 500 guests. These guests are divided up between a number of sub-hostesses who give special dinner parties, mostly at well-known restaurants, and all proceed after the dinner to the dance.

There have been a number of these during the week, but undoubtedly the most outstanding success belongs to the Hon. Mrs. Alfred Anson, whose first appearance as a great hostess last night is hardly likely to be eclipsed by anything of the kind during the season. Mrs. Anson, whose husband is a brother of Lord Litchfield, only quite recently joined the Anglo-American aristocracy through her marriage, although, as Mrs. Emery of New York, she was a regular visitor to London during the season for years.

Another smart function of the week was a luncheon given by the Countess of Grenard at Forbes House, Mayfair. This was attended by many well-known women—it was for women only. The Duchess of Marlborough had a busy week, but found time to preside at a meeting held at Sunderland House in aid of the British Women's Patriotic League. Taking for her theme, "Patriotism," the duchess said that it was much more a part of national life, and especially school life, in the United States than in England. She could never forget, she said, the beautiful ceremony which always opens the American school day, namely, the saluting of the American flag. There were several other speakers and so large an attendance that an overflow meeting had to be held.

OFF FOR IRELAND.

Great credit is due to Lady Strafford, formerly Mrs. Colgate of New York, for her energetic work in successfully organizing a matinee in aid of the waifs and strays of society, which was held this week at the Adelphi Theatre. The Anglo-American element was very strongly to the front in this good work. Among American women helping were Lady Randolph Churchill, Lady Essex and Lady Cunard, besides Lady Strafford. The program was also largely indebted to Americans, for, among others, the contributors were Ethel Levey, Melville Gideon and Ina Clair.

The Duchess of Manchester has gone to Ireland for a long stay, and evidently will not take much part in the season's social doings.

Recent arrivals of well-known Americans for the season include: Mr. and Mrs. Richard McCreery, who have returned to their house in Grosvenor Crescent from Paris; the Hon. Mrs. Henry Coventry, who has also returned from Paris, and Mrs. G. Ogilvy Haig, who has been in Italy.

BEAUTIES OF AMERICA IN BIG PAGEANT

"Spectacular" American Will Be Chosen to Take the Part at Centenary Ball.

LONDON, May 23.—"The most spectacular lady in England and the most spectacular lady from the United States," according to G. Sherwood Foster, who has entire charge of the Anglo-American centenary ball, to be held in Albert Hall, June 10, will appear as Britannia and Columbia, as representatives of the two countries.

Britannia will be impersonated by a titled woman who is almost six feet six inches in height. Strong pressure has been brought to bear on the committee of sixty-eight titled women nominally in charge of the arrangements to invite Maxine Elliott to "play" Columbia, but this role will go to one of the several American women who have titles.

The primary purpose of the ball, to which 4,000 distinguished men and women have been invited, is to raise $25,000 needed to carry out the aims of the British peace centenary committee.

The 4,000 dancers will all be in costume the most modern of which must antedate 1814. From 10 o'clock to midnight the music and dances will be confined to those in vogue in the eighteenth century. On the stroke of midnight the floor will be cleared for a series of processions picturing the early stages of the development of North America.

COLUMBUS IN LINE.

First the disembarking from the Santa Maria of Columbus and his followers will be shown—a life-size reproduction of the caravel to be built on a platform in front of the big organ in Albert Hall. Before Columbus will then parade Indian braves and maidens, among them not a few dukes and duchesses. Mrs. Griffiths, wife of the American Consul-General, has this part of the pageant in charge.

Sir Walter Raleigh will next lead his friends, the Virginia settlers, to pay obeisance to Columbus and his retinue. Then will come the Pilgrim Fathers, the Quakers, led by William Penn, the Dutch and the French.

George Washington, to be impersonated by an American resident in London who is said to bear a striking resemblance to him, will march on to the scene at the head of his colonial forces—and pay homage to America's discoverer with the rest. The Burgomaster of Ghent and the signers of the famous treaty will come next, and complete the historic portion of the pageant.

TO EXCHANGE GREETINGS.

The entrance of Britannia and Columbia is planned to be the climax of the procession. Britannia, at the head of a bevy of debutantes representing England's colonies, will enter from one end of the big hall at the same moment that Columbia, followed by American girls representing all the States and outlying possessions of America, appears at the other end. The two women will meet in the centre of the hall and there exchange felicitations.

The pageant will come to a finish with the entrance of representatives of all the countries of the world, who will each felicitate Britannia and Columbia on their arrival at the conclusion of the 100 years of peace.

Especial music is being written for the occasion, but when the pageant is on the band will strike up the very "raggiest" of ragtime tunes and for the balance of the night ultra-modern dancing will be in order.

Kaiser's Two Eldest Sons Now Reconciled

Crown Princess Ends Coolness Between Spouse and Eitel Friedrich.

BERLIN, May 23.—The Crown Princess Cecelia, whose fine tact and sympathetic disposition have made her immensely popular among all classes, has again won cordial approval by affecting a reconciliation between her husband and his brother, Prince Eitel Friedrich.

That the Kaiser's two eldest sons have not been on the best terms has been a matter of common report for some time. The Crown Prince, it is said, on several occasions openly indulged in sharp criticisms of his younger brother's conduct in both personal and political matters, and the Crown Princess, who has always succeeded in maintaining friendly relations with her brother-in-law, has now intervened, and with her customary tact and clevernes has succeeded in wiping out all animosities.

The first tangible sign of the reconciliation came this week, with the announcement of Eitel Friedrich's appointment to command the Regiment of Hussars, a post which the Kaiser bestowed upon him at the earnest request of the Crown Prince himself.

Among the weddings of the past week that of Miss Ruth Sargent Paine, daughter of Mr and Mrs. William A. Paine of Commonwealth avenue, to John Henry Blodgett stands out prominently, both for the social interest and its brilliance. The ceremony, which took place at 8 o'clock, was performed at the home of the bride's parents at an improvised altar surrounded by a myriad of white roses and iris. The Rev William H Butler associate minister of the Old South Congregational Church, officiated.

The bride, who wore a handsome gown of white satin, trimmed with Limerick point lace, and a tulle veil fastened to the coiffure with orange blossoms, was given in marriage by her father. Her full court train of Italian brocade was carried by her younger sister, Miss Esther Humphrey Paine, who served as maid of honor, and whose gown was of green taffeta. The bridesmaids were Ruth R. Blodgett of Brookline, sister of the bridegroom, Miss Edith L. Williams of New York and Miss Christine Everts of Roxbury, both classmates of the bride at Smith College in 1912, and Miss Mary A. Clapp of Swampscott. They were gowned alike in taffeta costumes of pink, violet, blue and yellow—sweet pea colors—and each carried a bouquet of these blossoms.

James Adams, Jr., of Brookline, was best man, and the ushers were F W Paine, Yale '10, a brother of the bride, Leonard Schoff of Philadelphia, a classmate of the groom at Harvard, G P Everts of Roxbury, Harvard '10; Harry Hooker of Wellesley, M I T '08, W E Stanwood of Wellesley and Ralph McClellan of Boston.

Over three hundred guests attended the reception which followed the ceremony.

Weddings for June are beginning to crowd society's calendar and there is hardly a day in the month of roses that hasn't a bride to its credit. On the first day of the month comes the wedding of Marjorie van Wickle and George A. Lyon, Jr., which is to be solemnised at the Summer home of the bride's mother, Mrs. William L. McKee of Commonwealth avenue.

I understand that it is not to be a large affair, but will be attended by several of the bride's intimate friends from Boston.

The McKees have just gone to their Summer home.

Dashing and petite Jane Fairfield, daughter of Mrs. James Cummings Barr of Boston and Beverly Farms, and recently engaged to Landon Humphreys of New York and Morristown, N. J., has caused a social stir by her recent announcement that she intends to swim the English Channel. The social philosopher asked when he heard it:

"What won't the dear girls be trying next?" but the would-be's who have tried the swim have grave doubts that Miss Fairfield can make good her threat. It is some stunt to swim the Channel (only one man—no woman—has done it yet.

Miss Fairfield caused a real fyror at the North Shore a season ago by her swimming. Everybody—all the swimming contingent at least—grew interested to the point of distraction. Swimming became the big noise for the Summer. And it all grew out of the grace and aptness that Miss Jane Fairfield, with a family lineage that reaches back to the Virginia Randolphs and then some—put into the art.

Doing the Channel is a far cry from the North Shore spring board arts, but Miss Jane is a clever and strenuous athlete, it has to be admitted.

Mrs James C. Barr, who has had such a very busy season of it socially, is now at the Barr estate in New Ipswich, N. H., but will return to town on Tuesday and with Mr. Barr will be for a few days at the Copley-Plaza before going to New York to meet Mrs. Barr's daughter, Miss Fairfield, who is returning from her Winter of study abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. Barr, with Miss Fairfield will go to their New Hampshire estate after returning from New York and will remain there for some time before going to their Beverly Farms home for the Summer.

One of the season's charming debutantes is Miss Katherine Partridge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Partridge of No. 44 Amory street, Brookline. Miss Partridge is now a pupil at Miss Creech's fashionable school for young ladies, where she has proven an apt pupil, particularly in French. She is an out-of-door girl, fond of tennis and swimming, and she is also a clever musician. Miss Partridge has a particularly attractive petite figure. Her white skin, dark hair and dark eyes have that effect of contrast which gives her a slightly foreign appearance.

The Partridges will spend the coming season at Marblehead at their Summer residence there, where Miss Katherine, with her two sisters and brothers, enjoy the out-of-doors to its fullest

The Louis Aggasiz Shaws, who make their all-the-year round home at Beverly Farms, are spending much time these days at their attractive bungalow in Peterborough, N. H., which they recently purchased with forty acres of land.

Mr. Shaw's health, which at one time was so poor, is rapidly improving as he spends as much time as possible in the open air. They expect to keep their bungalow open through the Autumn and possibly through the Winter. One Winter not long ago they spent all their time in the Adirondacks on account of Mr. Shaw's health. Here they will not be so isolated as former Governor Robert Bass, who married Mrs. Shaw's sister, Edith, has a large estate near by.

Both girls are exceptional horsewomen and still keep up their riding though they have so many other interests, both being ardent workers among the Progressives and both being devoted mothers.

Another pretty North Shore romance has just come to light in the announcement of the engagement of Miss Catherine Gunn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Newton Gunn of New York, to Frederick Gerdes Hostetter of Broad Run, Virginia.

For several years the Gunns have occupied the Cushing cot- Farms, while the Hostetter residence is on Grove street, on the road from Hamilton to Montser- tage on Hale street, at Beverly rat. Both young people are athletic and especially fond of the water. I understand it was on the beach that they met first and shortly after this meeting they were seen much together and last Summer I constantly saw them riding, driving and dancing together, so the engagement is little if any surprise to their many intimates of the fashionable North Shore colony.

One of the interesting weddings of the week was that in New York on Wednesday of William Orcutt Hubbard of Cambridge and Miss Gladys Lawrence, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Lawrence of New York. The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock at the Lawrence residence, No. 156 West Eighty-eighth street, and was performed by the Rev. Dr. Campbell of Cambridge. The house was decorated with a profusion of white lilacs, Southern blackberry blossoms and palms.

Candle light alone was used in the drawing room during the ceremony.

The bride was escorted by her father and entered the drawing room through an aisle of white ribbons. She wore a handsome gown of white satin with a long square train bordered with point lace and pearls. The low tulle corsage was also embroidered in pearls and the tunic of the skirt was edged with point lace. The tulle veil was edged about the face with pearls and orange blossoms and her bouquet was of lilies of the valley.

Her two little flower bearers were Newton and Eleanor Ryerson, twin children of Mr. and Mrs. William Ryerson, each carrying a basket of pink sweet peas.

Miss Lucy G. Lawrence, the bride's younger sister, was maid of honor, and wore a gown of pale green moire with bodice and tunic of green tulle embroidered in pearl and emerald beads. The moire skirt opened over a white lace petticoat trimmed with tiny pink roses. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and maidenhair ferns. Mr. Hubbard had for his best man his brother, Robert Hubbard, and the four ushers were Frank Hubbard, Herman Hagerdorn, Nicholas Danforth and George D. Genung.

A reception followed the ceremony. The bride's mother, who received with them, wore black tulle embroidered in jet, over pale pink. Mr. Hubbard graduated from Harvard in '05 and from the Harvard Law School in 1911. The engagement was announced last March.

Mr. and Mrs. Earle Perry Charloton have issued invitations for the wedding on June 11 of their daughter, Ruth Virginia, to Frederick M. Mitchell. The ceremony will take place at 6 o'clock at their home, Pond Meadow, Fall River.

June 2d brings several weddings, among them being that of Miss Ruth Arend, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Butterfield Arend, to Louis Tracy Girdler, for whom so many affairs have been given.

Miss Arend is an especially attractive girl and will make a decidedly lovely bride. The ceremony is to take place at the Central Congregational Church in Newtonville and the reception which follows will take place at the Newton Club.

On June 3 comes the wedding of Miss Helen Virginia Ainslie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Ainslie, and Harry Clark Coe, Jr. The ceremony will take place at Arlington, N. J., and after an extended honeymoon the young couple will come to Boston and make their home at No. 158 Harvard street, Brookline.

The North Shore Summer colony is interested in the wedding on June 3 of Miss Julia W. Robbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julian W. Robbins of New York, and Lydig Hoyt. The ceremony will take place in St. George's Church.

Mr. Hoyt is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Livingston Hoyt of New York, who have a Summer home on the North Shore.

Mr. Moss, who is a Harvard '09 man, will have his brother T. W. Moss, for his best man, and the ushers besides Mr. Simpkins and Mr. Ware will be Prescott Foster Huidekoper, Arthur Russell Jones, Francis A. Harding, John K. Hollins, Hugo G. de Fritsch, Johnston Livingston, Jr., William Fellowes Morgan, Jr., J. Henry Harper, Jr., Rene La Montagne, Harold W. Brooks, William A. Hazard, Jr., and W. Tilden P. Hazard. Master James Rogert Taller, Jr., a nephew of the bridegroom, is to be the ribbon boy. Both young people are well known in Boston society.

On June 15 comes the all-important wedding of Miss Sarah P. Rackemann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Felix Rackemann of "The Haven," Readville, and Edward Wigglesworth, Harvard '08. The ceremony will take place in the Unitarian Church at Milton at 4 o'clock.

Miss Rackemann is a wonderfully attractive girl and since her debut the past season has been much in evidence socially.

Mr. Wigglesworth, who is the only son of Mrs. Edward Wigglesworth of Beacon street, Manchester and Jackson, N. H., is also prominent in that set. His only sister, Mrs. Alexander S. Porter, Jr., married shortly after her presentation.

Another June wedding will be that of Miss Martha Bacon and George Whitney, which will be celebrated at Westbury, L. I., instead of Boston.

For Miss Bacon's wedding, on June 2, she has chosen Miss Josephine Osborn for her maid of honor. Her bridesmaids will be Miss Eleanor Greene of Buffalo, Miss Eleanor Roelker of East Greenwich, R. I., Miss Eliza Fox and Miss Julia Lewis of Philadelphia and Miss Molly Martin. Richard Whitney will be his brother's best man and the ushers will be Elliot Bacon, brother of the bride; Harold Vanderbilt, F. Skiddy von Stade, Francis R. Appleton, Jr., Harrison Tweed, Elliot Farley, Clarence Hay, J. J. Higginson, Dudley Pickman and Francis Sargent.

The Bacons spent the past Winter here, when Miss Bacon was decidedly prominent in all the smartest functions.

Mr. Whitney with his mother and brother, Richard Whiney, have until very recently occupied their house in Marlboro street. They are much identified with the Summer colony at Islesboro.

Miss Bacon's brothers are Gaspar Bacon, who married Priscilla Toland of Philadelphia; Robert L. Bacon, who recently married Virginia Murray of New York, and Elliott Cowdin Bacon, Harvard '10.

Her cousins are Mrs. Joseph S. Lovering of Milton, Mrs. Hamilton Fish, [illegible] and Mrs. John C. Greenleaf.

The announcement made during the week of the engagement of Miss Margery Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Lee of Boylston street, Brookline, to Francis W. Sargent, Jr., of Boston, was a surprise to her friends.

Miss Lee spent the Winter abroad with her mother, and since their return they made their headquarters at the Copley-Plaza until very recently, when they went to their North Shore estate, Villa al Mare, where the engagement was announced.

Miss Lee is the youngest of the attractive quartet of Lee girls, her two older sisters, Mrs. Oliver Turner and Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, Jr., being considered by many the most accomplished girls of their set. Miss Margery, however, is their close second and can swim, ride and play tennis quite as expertly as they.

Mr. Sargent is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Sargent of Hereford street. His sisters are Mrs. David Cheever of Hereford street and Miss Margaret Sargent. He is prominently identified with the Somerset, Norfolk Hunt, Tennis and Racquet and other prominent Boston clubs.

I saw Margaret Stackpole and her sister Grace at a dansant recently when they were both enjoying themselves immensely. Miss Margaret wore a pretty afternoon frock of black satin while her sister was in dark blue. Miss Margaret is by no means one of the frilly butterflies of fashion one might take a girl of her type to be. Her prime interest these days is in the Progressive League, in the interests of which she works indefatigably. Her charities, too, take up much of her time, so as for mere frittering time away she is not of that class of girls at all.

She is very popular, and enjoys her playtimes all the more for the hard work she does in between.

It seems strange that so many of the very young girls seem to cling to black for their evening gowns. Pretty Ruth Gaston is one of these, and at a recent evening affair I saw her in a pretty gown of black satin with ruffles of black chiffon and two red roses on the corsage. Phyllis Sears has some especially pretty evening and afternoon gowns of black, and, in fact, there is hardly a girl of the debutante set who hasn't at least one black evening gown.

There is hardly any prettier girl to be found in Boston smart-set circles than Miss Sabra Batchelder, who was a prominent bud of the Winter and who bears the record of having more admirers than any other girl in town. Besides having an extremely pretty face, she is always up to the minute in her style and is as sweet and unaffected as she is pretty. She is one of the first of the smart set girls to adopt the new Page cape and wears an extremely handsome one of dark blue. She does her hair in the latest French roll and a chic little black hat tipped at just the proper angle. I saw her the other day on Boylston street, with her mother and as she passed, nearly everyone turned to look at her.

I saw her again in the evening when she was a picture in a simple gown of white satin and white chiffon. They do say that she is especially fond of one suitor, who, though not quite so ardent as the others, judging from appearances, is always on hand at just the right moment. He is tall and dark and among the most popular of the undergraduates of Harvard.

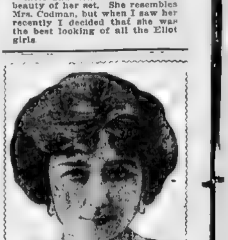
Mrs. Alfred Codman, who before her mariage was Lydia Eliot, is certainly one of the most strikingly beautiful young matrons in town. She is of the blonde type, tall and slender, and can dance with the best of them. Mrs. Codman has been using the black beauty patches to considerable advantage this season and seldom appears at any evening function without one. I saw her one day recently in a chic walking suit of dark blue and a small black lacquered hat tipped at rather a striking angle over her right eye. That same evening I saw her at a dancing affair dressed all in white chiffon with a large pale pink rose on the bodice and black beauty patches. She and her sister, Mrs. Charles S. Lovering (Molly Eliot) are as different in their appearance as they are in their tastes, Mrs. Codman being tall, slender and fair, while Mrs. Lovering is petite and very dark, and decidedly conservative. Their younger sister, who has been studying abroad and only recently returned, will be among the important debutantes of next Winter and will no doubt be the beauty of her set. She resembles Mrs. Codman, but when I saw her recently I decided that she was the best looking of all the Eliot girls.



Mlle. Genevieve Vix of the Opera-Comique, Paris, says: "My opinion of Savon Cadum is that it's the soap."

Bad complexions are more often due to parasites and bacteria than to bad blood. Every puff of wind carries thousands of these germs to your face, where they lodge in the invisible skin pores. Here they produce their evil effects by making the complexion coarse and colorless. Your protection lies in using Savon Cadum, the great French Complexion soap, which cleanses the skin cells and pores so thoroughly that the bacteria are completely eliminated. Sold by the leading dept and drug stores, 50c a cake.

SOCIETY CHATTER

by the DOWAGER

I happened to see Miss Louisa Loring [illegible] of [illegible] street [illegible] an interest [illegible] doing much. She was [illegible] gowned in da[illegible] blue with hat to match and was [illegible] her way to look after the interests of some of her pet charities.

Miss Dresel is one of the most ardent workers in the Society for Helping Destitute Mothers and Infants and gives most [illegible] of her wealth and her time to this cause.

Another society girl doing much in the various [illegible] which need support is Miss [illegible], whom I saw the other day looking especially well in a suit of dark gray cloth and small black hat. Miss Blackpole does [illegible] teaching in the [illegible] settlements and spends most of her time helping those less fortunate than herself. It seems these days that there is hardly any girl of the smart set who hasn't some way of spending her money for the betterment of the poor and that the girls of society are [illegible] butterflies of fashion is constantly being [illegible] by the hard work of these [illegible] in the settlements [illegible] the needy families [illegible] they have learned [illegible] ways. Miss Mary Josephine Amory, one of the most delightful of all society girls, has so many charities that she hardly takes time for her various social duties.

I saw Mrs. Walter Hunnewell, Jr., who before her brilliant marriage several weeks ago at Trinity Church was Miss [illegible] man, on the street the other day looking decidedly smart in cape-coat suit of dark blue and a [illegible] brown [illegible] topped with wings. Mrs. Hunnewell and her husband have just returned from [illegible] the greater part of which they spent in Italy. While in Rome they were entertained by Ambassador and Mrs. Thomas Nelson Page. Mrs. Hunnewell will take her place among the foremost young hostesses of her set as she is very [illegible] and her social position is unexcelled.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Templeton Coolidge, Jr., were other honeymooners returning from abroad with the Hunnewells. The Coolidges are at their Beacon street home for a short time before going to their Summer place Wentworth Mansion at Portsmouth, N. H.

I happened to see Mrs. Louis Kibbe of Warren looking very smart the other day at Trinity Place Station. She was just leaving for home with her infant daughter Mary [illegible] the former's father, Henry Sherwin, at whose home [illegible] where Mrs. Kibbe has been a guest since the birth of her baby. Mr. and Mrs. Kibbe are to take up their residence [illegible] Torrington Ct., during the Summer. Mrs. Kibbe, who is a niece of former Thomas [illegible] Sherwin of Jamaica Plain, has a host of friends here, where she will be greatly missed.

I hear the musicale which the Lars Andersons gave at their Washington home on Thursday evening was one of the smartest affairs of the week. Her jewels were especially handsome as also were her beautiful [illegible] which she collected when in Rome and which are said to be equal to those of Mrs. William F. Draper, wife of the late General Draper, whose collection was [illegible] that of Queen Margherita at the Italian capital.

Miss [illegible] Meyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George von L. Meyer of this city and sister of Mrs. Raymond Rogers, was of the bridal party yesterday at the smart wedding of Miss Katherine Jennings and [illegible] Harkness in Washington [illegible] home in [illegible] circle, which the guests included a number of Bostonians.

Mrs. Walter [illegible] Phillips of this city, who is [illegible] the Spring in Washington, was one of the best gowned women there at a large dinner on Wednesday evening. She wore a blue and silver brocaded satin gown with which she wore some beautiful large sapphires. In her light hair was a gold filet with the largest stones, while a necklace of them formed a beautiful strand.

I saw Miss Anna Blake Shaw the other day on her way to Lenox, where she went to open her estate in the Berkshires for the season. She looked especially well in a dark blue serge suit trimmed in pale gray satin and black silk buttons.

Mrs. George Lee of Brookline was among those who came in late at the The Dansant last Saturday afternoon at the Copley Plaza. She wore an imported creation of dark lavender cloth. It evidently was imported as the combination of gray chiffon put on in surplice effect on the bodice was decidedly Parisian. A bit of high color on the bodice was a small square of satin brocade in the pastel shades. Her neck was in the Dutch effect. She wore a beautiful long string of pearls. Her hat was a small fitted capote of the dark purple in chenille and long elbow suede gloves were worn to the elbow.

Mrs. Frances [illegible] Burnett had a large number of friends to see her off for New York Thursday when she went over to sail for Europe. Mrs. Burnett was looking very smart in a gown of dark blue serge trimmed with pale gray broadcloth revers and deep cuffs. She wore a plain dark blue tailored hat with trimming of black wings and velvet.

MARY JOSEPHINE AMORY WEDS IN JUNE

IMPULSIVE AND FASCINATING HEIRESS TO WASTE NO TIME NOW SHE HAS DECIDED

Artistic photographic study of Miss Mary Josephine Amory

The wedding of Miss Mary Josephine Amory, only daughter of Francis I. Amory of No. 413 Commonwealth avenue, to Fulton Cutting, Harvard [illegible] and son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting of New York, promises to be one of the most notable of the season. The event will be in mid-June.

Great wealth and distinguished family names will be united by the match.

Invitations to the wedding, to take place at the Amory Summer residence, Chapman's Corner, Beverly Cove, North Shore, will probably include members of the fashionable colony there and a large number from Boston and New York.

Miss Amory is a member of the Vincent and the Chilton [illegible] and has been educated both here and abroad.

Miss Amory is one of the most popular of Boston's debutantes. [illegible] two brothers, Charles Minot Amory, Harvard '12, whose wedding [illegible] Miss Gladys M. Munn proved one of the recent fashionable functions of Washington and Boston society, and Francis I. Amory, Jr.

The groom-to-be belongs to the New York Union and the Racquet and Tennis clubs. Robert Bayard Cutting, a brother, graduated at Harvard in '97 and a second brother, C. Suydam Cutting, was a Harvard [illegible] with Miss Amory's brother, Charles, in 1912. Mrs. [illegible] Cutting) Wilmerding and the Misses Elizabeth and Ruth are sisters. The North Shore Summer home of the Cuttings is the Proctor cottage on Hale street, Beverly Cove.

The engagement comes as little surprise to any who have known Miss Amory well, for Mr. Cutting has been her devoted courtier for [illegible]. I have seen them together on several occasions and especially noted his devotion one evening at the [illegible] Club play in Jordan Hall. He was also her partner at the costume ball at the Copley Plaza and also at the ball the Progressives gave there recently. On the last occasion Miss Amory was wearing a gown of brocaded King's blue satin, with long train, and experienced some difficulty in tangoing and managing her train at the same time, so she finally gave up, declaring that her train was too "progressive," and went to the dressing room, where she had the maid pin the train up underneath and totally out of her way. Then she tangoed to her heart's content the remainder of the evening, and for the most part with Mr. Cutting.

In the WORLD of SOCIETY

The dramatic [illegible] in Huntington [illegible] Wednesday evening evoked [illegible] appreciation from the large number of people present. [illegible] Mabel Golden, in a gown of pink charmeuse and blue chiffon, took competent charge of the evening, and the young entertainers responded to her direction with unusual skill. Miss Dorothy Lamb, in a batiste frock; Miss Claire Cunningham, gowned in blue crepe de chine and net; Miss Beatrice Bondrean, whose dress was pink taffeta, and Miss Helen Rogers, in a gown of lav[illegible] Miss [illegible] rie Louise Holley, who accompanied the songs and dances, wore a lingerie gown trimmed with yellow. Little Miss Alma Kiernan, who took the part of the little maid whose love affairs never ran smoothly, wore a frock of blue accordian pleated from an empire bodice of lace.

There were some artistic costumes displayed in the various acts. The pajama babies in the chorus of "Bye-Lo Land" were very pretty in their pink and blue garments. Miss Minnie Myron [illegible] Peggie Brady. She wore a [illegible] gown of [illegible] silk and her chorus was [illegible] costumed in pale yellow. Miss Margaret Lane and Miss Mildred [illegible] sang Dutch songs and [illegible] Dutch dances, one in a [illegible] skirted blue gown with a white apron and a pointed cap over her yellow braids, the other in [illegible] breeches and short jacket. Their feet were encased in wooden shoes.

About 200 people were present during the evening. Among them were Miss Mary McAlleer, Miss Alma Igelmann, Miss A. Norcross, Miss Mary Abby Proctor, Mrs. Pauline Nelson Hartstone, Mrs. Electa M. Sherman, Miss Florence Acorn, Miss Harriett Wood Foster, Dr. Mary [illegible], Dr. Ruby Stevens, Miss [illegible] Reynolds, Miss John Strong, Miss Ina Fairbanks, Miss Mary Lane, Miss Isabel Florence, Mrs. William Whalen, Mrs. Florence Holt and Miss Holt of Providence and Miss Margaret L. Raye of [illegible].

A big throng from Boston and New York is expected at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Thursday, Friday and Saturday to spend the Decoration Day holidays at the New Greenbrier, the White and in the cottage colony where members have been arriving for the past fortnight.

Entertaining of the week has centred in Mr. and Mrs. Clinton V. L. Remington of Fall River, who visited the springs to celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary at the New Greenbrier. Mr. and Mrs. Remington have been entertained at the hotel and at a luncheon and an old Virginia supper at Elmhurst Farm.

F. W. Hunnewell 2d of Wellesley has arrived at the Springs for the "kur" and was among those registering at the Greenbrier Golf Club, as was Frank S. Chick of Boston.

Samuel D. Warren of Boston returned to spend a fortnight, taking the "kur."

Recent registrations at the New Greenbrier include F. F. Hinckley and W. D. Nye of Boston.

Colonel J. E. Dana has opened "Tuscawilla" for the season.

While Mrs. Cushing was here I saw her with Mrs. Fearing, and their resemblance seemed more striking than ever. Mrs. Cushing, who has [illegible] a delightful model for her artist husband, is not so much better looking than Mrs. Fearing, but perhaps dresses with a wee mite more skill to bring out her beautiful Titian coloring. I saw them at an affair in the evening when Mrs. Fearing wore a handsome gown of white [illegible] covered with small beads of steel draped over white satin, and Mrs. Cushing was in white with touches of pale green.

The Cushings are to arrive at "The Ledges," their Newport estate, on June 14. They expected to open their villa next week, but extensive alterations delayed them. The Fearings will spend considerable time at Newport [illegible] guests of the Cushings.

Robert and Thomas W. Reilly of Brook street enjoyed an automobile trip through the northern part of the State last Sunday, and returned the following afternoon.

Frank B. Howland of Harvard street, well known in yachting circles, is preparing for a motor boat trip to the Cape Cod canal. He plans to leave the middle of the week and to remain in the Cape region until the middle of June.

Stanley M. Lane, one of the town's M. I. T. students, was awarded one of the Cabot medals for the year 1914. These awards are for improvement in physical condition and are participated in by the freshman class each year.

Work is rapidly progressing on the new Edward Devotion School House on Harvard street, and it is expected that the hall will be completed so that the graduation exercises of the school can be held there the latter part of the coming month. HOW TO DANCE THE ARGENTINE TANGO

Complete instructions written and illustrated for the SUNDAY AMERICAN by G. Hepburn Wilson, M. B. of the Salon de Danse, New York City—the foremost authority on modern dancing and one of the most brilliant and successful teachers of dancing in the United States

Many descriptions of the Tango have been written, most writers doing little more than illustrating the general confusion and lack of fundamental knowledge regarding the subject. So-called teachers have created steps out of their imagination and called it the Tango. By this method nearly a thousand different and distinct arrangements and combinations of old-time steps have been foisted upon the American public under the name Tango. The true Argentine Tango is danced by comparatively few people. It contains an instinctively native expression of the South American or Spanish people.

While it is true that many of the South American dances may be interpreted as somewhat sensuous, as undoubtedly the lower class of their people dance them, yet it must be remembered that there is much culture in the larger South American cities and the Tango, as an instance, has been purified even upon its native ground, taken up by the Parisiennes, who have given it grace, dignity and style, until today leading American dancers and leading American dance teachers have created a program for the Tango that rivals the artistic interpretation of classic music such as Pavlowa and other great dancers excel in.

The Tango has been somewhat misunderstood, because there have been those who have perverted the dance, who had neither refinement nor artistic imaginative powers enough to enable them to judge it as a dance whose STYLE calls forth the mind of a musician, as well as that of a dancer. The counter melodies, the instrumentation and especially the tempo of the Tango call forth a musical appreciation of things romantic, plus individual artistry, in interpreting the steps of the dance.

There has been such a universal demand for my written expression of the style, manner and steps of my interpretation of the Tango as danced by my dancing partner and myself, and as taught in the many Wilson studios in New York city and other cities, that I have consented to give a short description of the elemental steps of the Cortez, feeling sure that if my readers master the Cortez they will sense the joy of accomplishment and will become enthused with a desire to perfect themselves in the Tango, the ultimate of all modern dance achievement.

The Cortez, as I have pointed out, is the foundation of the Tango, and it is around the Cortez that all the beautiful variations are made.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CORTEZ FOR GENTLEMAN.

First Count—Take one step forward with the right foot into position shown in illustration No. 2.

Second Count—Step forward with the left foot, with toe close to the right toe, knees close together, the left toe turned in and left heel raised off the floor, as shown in illustration No. 3, finishing by immediately twisting the left heel in toward the right foot so that the left foot is now straight, as shown in illustration No. 4.

Note—This second count has the above two movements and is executed by placing the left toe down on the floor near the right toe and immediately twisting it. This gives the action of the CURVE in the Cortez.

Count Three—Step back with the left foot and lean the body to the left side into position shown in illustration No. 5.

Count Four—No step is taken to this count, but the time of this count is important and must be filled out by swaying the body over to the right side, with the right foot resting on the heel and the toe turned up, as shown in illustration No. 6

DESCRIPTION OF THE CORTEZ FOR THE LADY.

Second Count—Step backward with the right foot, at the same time turning the whole front of the body one-quarter turn to the right, right toe resting on the floor, heels raised in the position shown in illustration No. 3, but immediately twist the whole front of the body back to its original direction as shown in illustration No. 4.

Note—The second count has the above two movements and is executed by stepping backward. The twist of the body to the right and immediately twisting the body back to a straight position, gives a circular or curving motion to correspond with the action for the gentleman described in his second count.

Third Count—Take the right foot up gracefully and step forward close to the gentleman, at the same time leaning the body to the right side into the position shown in illustration No. 5.

Fourth Count—No step is taken to this count, but the time of this count is important and must be filled out by swinging the body over to the left side with the full weight resting on the right foot and the left heel raised with the left toe resting lightly on the floor as shown in illustration No. 6.

Note After this Cortez has been carefully practiced, executed with grace and perfect harmony by the two dancers in absolute time to the music, the first figure of the Tango may be executed as follows: Taking first position the same as in the One-Step), gentleman starts forward with the right foot taking four slow steps forward, the lady taking four steps backward starting with her left foot, then immediately and without pause execute the Cortez to four counts, each count being in the same time or speed as the single steps taken in the walking step herein described.

After executing the four counts of the Cortez to four counts of the music, repeat the four walking steps again, gentleman moving forward and lady moving backward, and repeat the Cortez at the end of the four steps.

This should be practiced again and again until accomplished with perfect ease and grace.

The Cortez is the secret of the Tango. It is the fundamental of the Tango, and it is an absolute necessity that it be thoroughly and beautifully executed before attempting the many variations to be found in the Tango.

The services of an expert in the Tango will be required to execute the variations referred to, as they almost defy an accurate written description, and the services of a specialist is most desirable.

It is my purpose in this lesson to give the fundamental of the Tango as a basis for your further advancement.

The true Tango demands concentration, application and much perseverance under the supervision of a qualified expert, if one would thoroughly master it. The beauty and difficulty of the dance proves its artistic value to the dancer.

The music is entrancing. Columbia records No. 1462, "Mena, Take My Arm," or 5544, "Amapa," may be mentioned as being typical.

Notwithstanding the difficulty of an accurate performance of the Tango, no music of any of the modern dances has so won the genuine interest of musical people.

Aside from melodies peculiarly subtle and unique, aside from interpretative phrases of exhilarating inspirational force, the chief charm of Tango music to the musically inclined and to those who dance lies to a great extent in the counterpoint or counter melodies involved, which makes this music unusually interesting and in a class or style by itself.

When you consider that it is an acknowledged fact that but very little suitable or distinctive Tango music has been written by American composers, the importance of the genuine Argentine music (imported and issued by the Columbia Graphophone Co. and by the Columbia Company only) is at once manifest, and accounts in part for the tremendous success of Columbia dance records.

On account of their inherent musical beauty and quality Columbia Tango records have been purchased by many musicians simply because of their STYLE and charm; and it is a fact that these records have contributed to the amateur dancer the "Tango" spirit to the extent of psychologically influencing the dancer to originate many new and novel steps and call them "the Tango." This in part explains why the genuine Argentine Tango is danced by so few people and why so many varied and so-called "Tango's" have come into being.

The indefinable musical spirit of the Argentine Tango has lent its strong influence in many directions, for today we have "Tango" hats, "Tango" skirts, "Tango" teas. An invariable daily expression among social leaders is this query: "Are you going Tangoing tonight?"

THOUSANDS HAVE ALREADY LEARNED TO DANCE "THE ONE-STEP," "THE HESITATION" AND "THE MAXIXE" THROUGH THIS WONDERFUL METHOD—NOW COMES "THE TANGO."

Festival with a Funny Name

Tomorrow evening will witness the opening of the "Psafabun" festival in St. Francis de Sales Church Hall in Roxbury, and it will continue throughout the week ending Saturday evening, May 30. The name of this festival is unique and suitable presents will be given to those who are able to fathom its meaning. It is taken from the first letters of the different words composing a sentence that befits the occasion. The meaning will be announced at the close of the festival.

The object of the Psafabun is to defray the expenses incurred by the erection of the beautiful school in the St. Francis de Sales parish during the past year. Ever since Monsignor O'Farrell, the pastor of the parish, came to Roxbury over eight years ago, he has worked unceasingly to procure a school for the parish. His first work was to procure the land on which the building now stands besides other land surrounding the church, and when this was accomplished he began the erection of one of the finest school buildings in the city.

For the past month the ladies and gentlemen of the parish have been lending their energies to make this festival a success. Under the direction of Rev. Charles A. O'Brien, who has general charge, ten tables have been organized and placed in particular charge of the different priests connected with the parish. IN BOSTON SHOPS

By BETTY THE SHOPPER.

At this season of the year the furnishings of the Summer cottage form an extremely fascinating subject.

Though, as a race, we are more and more developing into confirmed flat dwellers, springtime seldom fails to arouse the "back to the soil" germ lurking within us and the exodus from the city is always a large one.

There was a time when the move to the country home meant foregoing many of the comforts of the city dwelling. Cramped quarters and few modern conveniences marred the cottager's happiness. In the past few years, however, the architects have responded to the call for small houses, and by a gradual process of elimination and adaptation styles of architecture have been evolved, which meet the requirements of the Summer dweller with a cleverness that amounts to art.

The pleasure of planning the house itself, is vouchsafed only to the fortunate few. Most of us must set up our household gods, within the four walls designed by and for other people. If there are any architectural shortcomings—why we must learn to make the best of them. It is in the furnishing, however, that one may express his or her individuality to the heart's content.

Since the Summer time is a period of relaxation and recuperation, the country or seashore cottage should above all express restfulness and airiness. Bulky furnishings, heavy draperies, in fact, anything that suggests stuffiness, should be avoided. This must be kept in mind when selecting the color schemes for the various rooms. Some even go so far in their desire to be summery as to select colors that express the environment of the cottage, as in a country house surrounded by fields and trees, tones of green and brown may be effectively used, if it is a seashore cottage, the walls and floor hangings may repeat the tones of the sand and sea water.

If the Summer home is to be at all pretentious, then it is best to bare your soul to a competent decorator. He will interpret your suggestions, no matter how vague, and reproduce with the aid of "willow, oak and chintz" what had heretofore been your most cherished dream. If you have penchant for period furniture your home may successfully boast an Elizabethian living-room—a dining-room done in the early Italian, and a perfect "duck" of a breakfast room, which is hopelessly modern. If the scale and general color scheme is the same—a play of various colors upon a neutral background—then this group becomes a unit, and will delight the eye of the observer.

There is a growing inclination for the Empire period in decorative schemes and for the reproduction of old Italian furnishings. Period furniture is an interesting study and Adam, Heppelwhite, Sheraton and Chippendale soon become familiar names to those searching for the best in period decorative schemes.

If a formal simplicity is desired, the Colonial scheme will be found most satisfactory. Particularly happy is this for the native of New England, where every attic boasts one or more priceless antiques. These go far in beautifying the home and placing it in the period desired.

* * *

Granting that one can afford the luxury of period furniture, a home of this time will undoubtedly be a source of great pride. The only drawback connected with it, is the likelihood of being constantly cautioned against scratching this or that. To most people this would seriously hamper the pleasure of the possession.

Probably it is for this reason that the average Summer home is furnished with an eye to comfort regardless of period and style. The modern mission and wicker stand a good deal of hard usage and make charming fittings for the Summer home.

For a mountain bungalow, the Mission seems most appropriate, and for the seashore cottage, the willow is extremely attractive. It's cleanliness and lightness gives it the ideal Summer appearance, and it is equally good on the veranda or in the house.

If the papering of the cottage is left to one, the matter of keeping harmony is much simplified. The location of the rooms will have much to do with the color of the paper, as some papers suggest warmth, others coolness. A southest bedroom will look well done in cool greens, while the paper of the northeast bedroom might be yellow.

The living room, the most important room in the house, must above all have a cheery, restful appearance. There is no one color which has a decided popularity, though taupe, browns, mulberry, old gold and blue are used extensively and the tones are less subdued than we have been accustomed to. The wall paper since it's purpose is merely that of a background, should never be obtrusive. A flowered paper seldom serves as good back ground for pictures, so next to an absolutely plain paper, the striped or one with a small set design is most satisfactory where pictures are to be hung. The small floral patterns are very dainty in the bedrooms, though many people prefer even to have these walls plain and carry out the floral touch in the cretonne or chintz draperies.

The choice of drapery materials is infinite, and since most of them are sunfast it will not require a great deal of skill to make a selection of suitable fabrics. The curtain which is to hang next the glass, must of course, be washable. With the windows always open they collect a deal of dust and must be laundered frequently.

Very pretty madras can be had in cream ecru and white, plain or with a woven design, as squares, oblongs, etc. This sells from 25 to 75 cents a yard, and is 20 to 54 inches wide. Many of the new madras cloths have dainty flower designs in color and others are in solid colors. When either of these is used the necessity of overdraperies is done away with. Colored madras sells from $1.50 to $2.50 a yard and is most attractive.

In rooms where the walls are in low tones, and white curtains without over drapings would be a rather violent contrast, madras in dull shades of rose, gold and blue is very suitable.

Scrim, net, dimity, Swiss and even sheer linen are used a great deal. To insure a pleasing effect from the outside it is most satisfactory to have the curtains the same throughout the house. If the curtains used are cream of ecru, then one can carry out the color idea of the room in the over-hangings. If the windows are large as in the living room or library, a narrow width of good drapery, harmonizing or in contrast to the general scheme is desirable.

The new hand blocked linens make beautiful draperies, and can be had in all colors and all designs from the most conventional arrangement of a simple flower to the extreme Futuristic designs. And by the way this Futuristic craze in decoration cannot be lightly passed over. Vienna, which has always been a big factor in the art world, especially that relating to decoration, is said to be responsible for it's acceptance in fabric manufacture. France has taken it up and now we have the Martine School of Decorative Design, in Paris, which is devoted to textile designing.

In this school, children without any previous knowledge of color or drawing are encouraged to express their ideas with the brush. Flowers animals, birds, in fact anything their fancy dictates, they execute and in a way "execute" seems a most appropriate term. Needless to relate the results are startling. Poiret has taken many of these designs and worked them into his silks. Though they still have a tendency to raise the hair, we are gradually accepting them and there is no denying the fact that they carry with them a certain air of joyousness.

The silhoutte effect in cretonnes and linens also comes from Vienna. There are the materials with black backgrounds and white figures or the reverse. They carry a certain air of elegance that lighter hued materials do not have. In the tapestries, cretonne and wall hangings, dainty decorative motifs founded on the costumes of a hundred and fifty years ago are used with an excellent result.

* * *

One of our shops is showing a charming set of white willow, with the cretonne cushions carried out in this way. The background is in black and the figure in a delicate gray. The effect is stunning.

This season, wicker in a brown stain is very popular for the living room of the Summer home. Being neutral in color it harmonizes with almost any scheme and has a richness all it own.

It is now possible to obtain library tables, setees, magazine racks, book cases, tea tables and wagons, muffin stands, in fact almost any furnishing one may desire in the wicker, so there is no chance for the jar a mixture of furniture often occasioned.

Not the least important of the house furnishings are the rugs. These, too, should be in colors and materials that carry out the summery atmosphere.

The shops are showing beautiful ones at surprisingly small prices. Many are fibre rugs, woven of prairie grass, Manila twine, the pulp of the Norwegian pine bark and various other things which will wear and retain colors. These can all be had in any color desired, and when they begin to show signs of dust and dirt can be successfully cleansed with soap and water. They are guaranteed weather proof, so no amount of exposure will injure them.

* * *

The Indian drugget rugs, made in India, on hand looms, are splendid for bungalows. Those I saw had a certain ruggedness about them suggestive of the open.

There are beautiful rugs woven by the blind in an asylum near Boston that will be very approriate for the bath room and bedrooms. They are rag rugs, but the rags are gotten at the mills, so they are perfectly clean. The design and colors are dainty and they are also washable.

Next to the living room, the dining room is the most interesting room in the house. Have it as inviting and sunshiny as possible. A great deal of furniture in cane and wood combined is used, though the good old standard mahogany is popular even in the Summer home.

All superfluous furnishings should be abandoned in the bedrooms. This room can easily, with the least outlay, be made the most attractive in the house. If the color of the walls is plain, depend upon the color note in your hangings and coverings. The dainty chintzes and cretonnes that one can get now are beautiful in design so that they will be practically all the decoration needed. It is possible to purchase an entire chamber set done in cretonne, with enameled frames. This set will include bed, bureau, chairs, table, desk, work table, shirtwaist box and millinery boxes. If the designs are not too obtrusive this ought to be a very pretty way to furnish a bedroom.

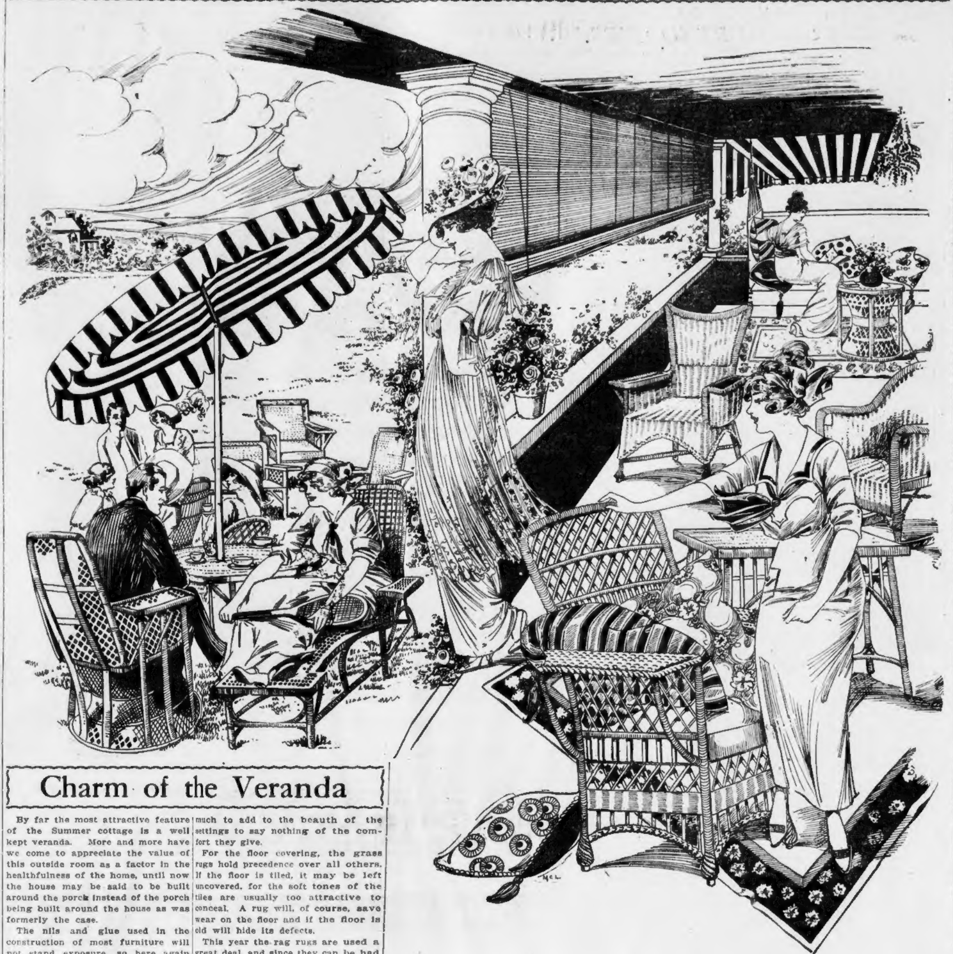
Lacquered furniture is very good again, and in delicate grays and pearls white will be charming for Milady's boudoir. The dainty hand-decorated furniture is very attractive, and many of the most artistically furnished country homes have it in all the bedrooms.

FOR THE VERANDA IN HAPPY SUMMER DAYS



Charm of the Veranda

By far the most attractive feature of the Summer cottage is a well kept veranda. More and more have we come to appreciate the value of this outside room as a factor in the healthfulness of the home, until now the house may be said to be built around the porch instead of the porch being built around the house as was formerly the case.

The nils and glue used in the construction of most furniture will not stand exposure, so here again wickerware is the most serviceable as well as the most attractive. There are charming effects in silver gray, ivory, fumed brown, and in the natural color. Green is always restful to the eye and has proven a most serviceable color. The natural is even more attractive as it takes on a mellow tone with age.

Since it is quite the proper thing to serve tea in the open, every necessary requisite can now be obtained suitable for porches, in the wicker. Tea wagons, trays, cookie baskets, muffin stands, all trimmed or lined with cretonne. They are far from expensive when we take into consideration the fact that they can all be used in the house during the Winter.

Chairs with the magazine holders on the side are quite an accessory to the veranda and the wicker chairs with the foot extension are the very essence of comfort. Deep divans, cushioned in cretonne, or even a wicker couch with the removable cretonne covered mattrass, will be welcome additions to the sun parlor. Attractive pillows and cushions will do much to add to the beauth of the settings to say nothing of the comfort they give.

For the floor covering, the grass rugs hold precedence over all others. If the floor is tiled, it may be left uncovered, for the soft tones of the tiles are usually too attractive to conceal. A rug will, of course, save wear on the floor and if the floor is old will hide its defects.

This year the rag rugs are used a great deal, and since they can be had in a variety of designs and colorings, with the added attraction of being washable there is a very practical reason for their popularity. A six by nine rug can be had for about six dollars, and a nine by twelve for ten. The grass rugs in green are probably the most popular for porch use, though the browns are sold a great deal.

If one is a bird fancier and wishes to keep the pet in the sun room where the family may enjoy its song, then a cage in keeping with its surroundings must be secured. Wicker or willow bird cages can be bought now, with the spokes or slats so near together that the smallest bird could not squeeze through. These cages are easily kept clean, as hot water and soapsuds are good for wicker if it is unstained. These cages sell for about ten dollars.

No porch is complete without flowers. The Canton ferneries in the hour glass pattern are very new. Flower boxes, jardinieres of heavy pottery and dainty trellises over which roses climb will do much toward making the possessor of such a veranda a howling optimist.

The Prints of Spring

The call for a change in the hangings of the home is loud and insistent in the early Spring. The warm, sober colored draperies which were so comforting in the Winter months are depressing and suggestive of bleakness. No materials can overcome this sombre atmosphere more quickly and effectively than the gay colored cretonnes and chintzes the shops are temptingly displaying.

They can be had in any color and any design, from the faintest, most delicate pastel colorings to the riotous blare of our cubist friends.

This year the hand blocked linens are very attractive. Almost every girl who has attended a school where manual training was taught, has one or more of these hand blocked textiles to show as a result of her training. These designs were very painstakingly cut into the small block of wood, which was later smeared with the colors she loved best and then stamped on to linen or silk. Very beautiful textiles have resulted from just this work, and the present rage of the hand-blocked design is nothing more nor less than an outcome of this type of hand work.

These hand-blocked linens range in price from one to three dollars a yard. The colorings are good and for Summer hangings they are most effective.

In the newest cretonnes, the black background seems to be having a great vogue. The figures upon it are often in white, suggesting a silhouette. Some of these in the more distinctive patterns have old-fashioned ladies in historic costumes in design. For the boudoir these would be good. All the flowers in the world's garden are worked into these cretonnes and chintzes, and they are inexpensive enough to be used in almost any home. Good cretonnes can now be had from 35 cents up to a $1.50 in widths that can be used to advantage. The chintz has a sprightlier air than the average cretonne and the design is usually more delicately executed. Glazed chintzes are sold for the window shades in country houses and at times are used most effectively for lambrequins. They do not drape so softly as the unglazed, so can not be so generally used for hangings.

For overdraperies, one of the shops is showing a sunfast material, called vesper cloth. This is a two-toned fabric, bronze and green, blue and green and gold and blue. It sells for $1.50 a yard.

A silk and cotton mixture, much like rajah silk, sells for 85 cents a yard. This is forty-five inches wide.

A very sheer sunfast material, fibre silk and cotton combined, is forty-five inches wide and sells for $1.25 a yard. For curtain materials, this fibre silk is said to be more durable than the worm silk, as it will not fade.

The new sundour materials can be had from 85 cents to $4.

FOR MILADY'S WARDROBE

Dainty curled ostrich tips are the latest trimmings to be used on gowns, wraps and hats. Tunics, sleeves and neck are outlined with this feathery decoration. On the hats the feathers encircle the crown at regularly spaced intervals.

* * *

Very striking Summer handbags are in the new tones of silk called the metallic glace. They are made from faille bengaline. The handles are of the material, and a nobby little tassel finishes the bag.

* * *

The popularity of the cape grows apace. The new Summer suits are being made up in the lovely Rodier materials, and a cape takes the place of the usual coat in the suit. These materials are said to wash, which is, of course, strongly in their favor.

* * *

China silk promises to take the place of the muslins for the Summer frock. Since it is cool and launders easily, there is no doubt it will be widely worn.

* * *

White nets, both plain and embroidered, are having a tremendous vogue.

* * *

Venise, valenciennes and novelty lace top net flouncings are extremely smart for the dressy frock made over a soft silk foundation.

* * *

Veils of white net edged with real lace are the newest cry in the veil line.

* * *

The correct thing in spats for afternoon wear are those of white cloth. For evening wear they are of venise and Irish crochet lace.

* * *

For the morning frock taffeta will be more popular than linen. A charming blue taffeta frock had a vest, collar and cuffs of banana yellow, which is one of the most popular colors of the season.

* * *

The pantalette petticoat is a smart new accessory of the Summer gown.

* * *

Plaid and striped materials in ratine weave and very new designs are popular for the Summer wash suit.

* * *

* * *

A nobby parasol, appropriate for wear with the more severe style of Summer costume, is called a coaching parasol. The colors are subdued red, blue, purple and green, and they can be used in rain or shine. The very modish lady carries hers swinging from her arm on a broad band of ribbon finished with a perky bow.

The very newest sunshade is dome-shaped, with a handle so long and slender that it serves as a sort of Directoire cane.
